STAMFORD (or STANFORD), LINCOLN, a borough and market town in the wapentake of Ness, union of Stamford, parts of Kesteven : 90 miles from London (coach road 89), 21 from Grant-ham, 40 from Boston. — Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough to Stamford station : from Derby, through Syston and Melton to Stamford, 69 miles. — Money orders issued here : London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m. and 4½ p.m. : post closes 7½ p.m. — Stamford—which was originally called Steanford, from a ford over the Welland, paved with stones—is a place of great antiquity, having, as tradition states, been founded by Bladud, one of the Trojan kings, many centuries before the Christian era. This, however, is one of those stories which living men's minds have handed down from age to age without authentic record, but become, by their very existence, indirect evidences of facts, of which, through regular history, we have but a misty proof. For instance, the assertion would show that this island was known intimately in Syria in the time of St. Paul, and that the record of his being here, and Christianizing the land some years before his martyrdom at Rome, is authentic, long before the Romish monk Augustine set his foot upon our shores. That, however, to a certain extent, is beside the case ; but yet not impertinent to the point, as illustrating, as this work professes to do, the rise and progress, as well as the present state, of the several towns and villages of Britain. The earliest authenticated record of Stamford was made by Henry of Huntingdon, who, after alluding to its high antiquity, states that it is the place where the Scots and Picts—having ravaged the country all the way from the banks of the Tweed, were met by the Britons under Vortigern, assisted by Hengist the Saxon, whom he had called in to his aid—were totally and entirely defeated, and at last driven ignominiously beyond their own border. This was also one of the five cities in which Alfred the Great allowed the Danes to settle, after his terrible overthrow of them under Guthrum their prince. These cities were Stamford, Derby, Leicester, Nottingham, and Lincoln, called in consequence Fif-burgenses ; but to which were afterwards added Chester and York, when the term was changed to Sej-burgenses. A castle was afterwards erected here by King Edward the Elder, in order to awe those Danish burghers, of which no traces now remain ; but the foundations of a castle erected and fortified by Stephen, to the north-west of the town, during his war with the Empress Matilda, are still clearly traceable. During the reign of Henry III. the Roman Catholics instituted theological lectures here, which being attended by the youths of the best families in the neighbourhood, Stamford became celebrated as a place of education, and a college was erected : but dissensions arose in the reign of Edward III. between the students of the southern and of the northern counties of England, and many of the pupils, with the professors at their head, retired to Cambridge, from which they were shortly recalled by royal proclamation ; and statutes having been passed respecting the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, the College of Stamford ceased to exist. From that time, throughout the great contests between the houses of York and Lancaster, and the Parliamentarians and Charles I., Stamford has had its fair share of historical celebrity ; and as if to finish with the ludicrous, the great fat man, Daniel Lambert, died and was buried here in St. Martin's burial-ground. He measured three feet one inch round the leg, and nine feet four inches round the body. Stamford is pleasantly situated on ground rising from the river Welland, and is connected with Stamford-Baron, in Northamptonshire, which forms part of the town, by a bridge of five arches over that river. It is eminently picturesque in appearance, lively, cheerful, and contains, perhaps, as active and enterprising a population as any town in the kingdom. The houses are well built, the shops are tasteful, the streets well paved and lighted with gas, and the appliances for intellectual and social enjoyment abundant. The churches are numerous. In the principal street, leading from the bridge, stands the town-hall, a handsome building of freestone, erected in 1776, on the site of an older structure which had fallen into decay. At the back of it is the borough jail. The Welland is navigable up to the town, forming a great convenience for the inland trade, which consists almost entirely of malt, beer, coal, timber, and other necessities for the district, in which no manufactures are established. Anciently there were fourteen parish churches here ; but several of those in the liberties were destroyed in 1461, by the northern soldiers ; and, in 1538, the remainder were reduced at the dissolution of monastic institutions. By an act of parliament, passed in 1547, five were allowed to remain, which still continue. St. Michael's, however, a very ancient edifice, having fallen nearly altogether into a mass of ruin in 1832, was promptly rebuilt by subscription, &c. St. Mary's is reputed the mother church of Stamford. It appears to have been built about the latter end of the 13th century. The great tower of this church is a striking pile of masonry. The others were erected or rebuilt in the 15th century. The livings are—The vicarage of All Saints, consolidated with the rectory of St. Peter's ; rated at £12. 7s. 8½d. ; gross income, £453 ; patrons, Lord Chancellor for one turn, and the Marquis of Exeter for two, in processu. — The disch^d. rectory of St. George, united with that of St. Paul's, rated at £5. 3s. 11½d., returned at £125. 7s. 10d. ; gross income, £124 ; patron in 1841, the Marquis of Exeter. — St. Michael's, a disch^d. rectory, with the vicarage of St. Andrew and the rectory of St. Stephen, rated at £8. 14s. 2d., and returned at £128. 17s. 1d. ; gross income, £153 ; patron in 1841, the Marquis of Exeter. — St. John the Baptist, a rectory, with St. Clement's united ; rated at £8. 6s. 8½d., and returned at £144. 3s. ; gross income, £168 ; patrons in 1835, the Marquis of Exeter two turns, and the Corporation of Stamford one turn. — St. Mary's, a disch^d. rectory; rated at £4. 18s. 9d., and returned at £80; gross income, £87; patron in 1841, the Marquis of Exeter. Here was anciently a Benedictine priory, dedicated to St. Leonard, valued at the dissolution at £36. 17s. per annum. It is now used as a barn. Of the priory of Carmelites, the west gate is still standing. It is a handsome specimen of the architecture of the period. A convent of Grey friars was founded by Henry III.; a postern and part of an outer wall of it still exist. Here were also priories of Augustines, Gilbertines, and Dominicans, and an hospital, or house of lepers. Besides the churches already noticed, here are an Independent church, formed in 1720; a Baptist, in 1828; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1806; and a Roman Catholic. The free grammar-school was founded in 1548, by Mr. Wm. Radcliffe, and further endowed in the reign of James I. by one of the Earls of Exeter, who gave £108 per annum to Clare Hall, Cambridge, for power to nominate eight scholars, and out of them three fellows, with a preference to the youth educated in this school, on the vacancy of any of their scholarships. There are other resources; and the estates, in 1834, yielded to the master an income of £548 per annum; notwithstanding which, the school was then in a neglected and dilapidated condition. The Blue-coat school was established by subscription in 1704: income about £150 per annum. Two day and Sunday schools are endowed by Wells' charity. A national school for girls was founded in 1805, and is supported by funds common to it and the lying-in institution. In 1833 there were 118 scholars in this school. There are also an infant school, containing about 100 children; two other daily schools with small endowments; and twenty-two other day or boarding-schools. The charitable institutions are numerous and liberally endowed. The principal is the hospital, or bead-house, founded in 1493, and largely endowed by William Browne, for a warden, confrater, ten poor aged men, and two nurses, who are incorporated, and have a common seal. Truesdale's hospital, in Scot Street, was founded in 1700, and eight poor men with their wives are lodged in it, receiving a weekly allowance of 5s., with an allowance for coal and clothing annually. Snowden's hospital affords an asylum to eight poor women, with a weekly allowance of 2s. each. Williamson's almshouse has apartments for seven poor women, with a weekly allowance of 5s. All Saints' and Peter's Hill almshouses have each small endowments, and they share pretty largely in several charitable bequests left for the poor of the place. The earliest charter given to Stamford was granted by Edward IV., the last by James II., and under these and the intermediate ones, Stamford became a corporate place; under the municipal act it is divided into two wards, governed by six aldermen and eighteen councillors, under the usual corporate style, the income of the corporation being about £2,250 a year. Stamford sends two members to parliament, and is a polling-place for the county—the mayor, for the borough members, being the returning officer. Contains 1,078 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 6,385: do. in 1851, 9,065: ass^d. prop^y £10,699: poor rates in 1848, £1,943. 17s. Market days, Monday and Friday. Fairs: Tuesday before February 13,

The park is various, well timbered, and, for its several parts, picturesque in the extreme, showing almost every variety of rural scenery. The present honourable proprietor of Stanford derives his descent from an ancient family, which took its name from Winnington, in Cheshire, where they had settled towards the latter part of the 13th century. One of them, Francis Winnington, Esq., was a colonel in the service of Charles II. That gentleman left a son, Francis, who was solicitor-general to James II., and was knighted; and his grandson, Edward Winnington, Esq., was created a baronet in 1755; of him the present baronet is the great-grandson.

STANLOW-HOUSE, CHESTER, an extra-parochial district in the hun^d. of Wirral, on the southern bank of the Mersey: 192 miles from London, 9 from Chester, 6 from Frodsham. — Some remains of a monastic structure, once in existence here, may still be seen in a farm-house on the site. Of this institution, Bishop Tanner says: — John, constable of Chester and baron of Halton, founded here, A. D. 1172, an abbey for forty Cistercian monks, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary; but upon a representation to Pope Nicholas IV., that by reason of its low situation this monastery was often much incommoded by the overflowings of the sea or water of the Mersey, he gave leave to translate these religious to Whalley, in Lancashire, where they had a better habitation provided for them by the pious munificence of Henry Lacy, Earl of Lincoln, about the year 1296. There were only four monks left here, where a small cell seems to have continued till the dissolution. — Contains 230 acres: 1 house: popⁿ in 1841, 30.

STANMER, SUSSEX, a parish in the hun^d. of Ringmer, union of Newhaven, rape of Pevensey: 55 miles from London (coach road 48), 5 from Lewes, 4 from Brighton. — Brighton Rail. to Lewes, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 187 miles. — Money orders issued at Lewes: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. — The church, which was built about 25 years ago, is small, but extremely neat, and has a pleasing embattled tower. — The living, a rectory, with that of Falmer, in the diocese of Chichester, is valued at £16: pres. net income, £141: patron, Archbishop of Canterbury and Earl of Chichester alternately: pres. incumbent, J. W. Goodday, 1832: contains 3,050 acres: 23 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 120: ass^d. prop^r. £654: poor rates in 1848, £63. 13s. Tithes commuted in 1839. — Stanmer Park, the seat of the Earl of Chichester, is entered from the Lewes road by a handsome gateway, supported by two appropriate lodges. The mansion, which is an imposing stone structure of considerable size, is placed upon a somewhat low site, so that it is not perceived or understood until closely approached. The park is pleasingly undulated and well stocked with game. His lordship, Henry Thomas Pelham, Earl of Chichester and Baron of Pelham, and a baronet, is the chief of an ancient family which assumed its name from Pelham, in Herefordshire, where, in 1265, stood a castle, the owner of which was in possession in the time of Edward I., and whose ancestors had been proprietors of the lands before the Norman Conquest. The descendants of that ancient stock distinguished themselves in various reigns, both as warriors and statesmen. One of them, Sir William, was ancestor of the Earls of Yarborough, and another, Thomas Pelham, Esq., was one of the first to be raised to the rank of a baronet on the first creation of the title. Sir Thomas, the fourth baronet, having promoted the accession of William and Mary to the throne of England, was, during their reign, elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Pelham of Loughton, in the county of Sussex. The son of that nobleman, Thomas, the second baron, was, in 1714, created Earl of Clare, in Suffolk, and Viscount Houghton, with remainder, in default of male issue, to his brother, the Honourable Henry Pelham, and advanced, with the same limitation, to the marquise of Clare and the dukedom of Newcastle. The duke, having filled high ministerial offices, was made a knight of the Garter, and was afterwards created Duke of Newcastle-under-Line, with remainder to Henry Clinton, Earl of Lincoln, husband of Catherine, one of the daughters of his brother, Henry Pelham, who died without male issue, and through her the present noble family of Clumber derive. His Grace also obtained, by creation, the barony of Pelham of Stanmer, with remainder to Thomas Pelham, Esq., of that place. This latter gentleman, who succeeded as sixth baronet, having long served the state, was, in 1801, elevated to the earldom of Chichester, and of that nobleman the present peer is the grandson.

STANMORE (GREAT), MIDDLESEX, a parish in the hun^d. of Gore, union of Hendon: 15 miles from London (coach road 11), 4 from Harrow-on-Hill, 6 from Barnet. — Nor. West. Rail. to Harrow station, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Rugby to Harrow, &c., 125 miles. — The village, which is about half a mile in length, is built on the slope of a hill leading to Bushy Heath, from the summit of which are commanded extensive views on the south of the Surrey hills, and the vale of the Thames, and on the north, of the equally beautiful vale of Herts. The site is so elevated that the ground-floors of the houses are said to be on a level with the top of the tower at Harrow. The church, which is a very neat building, is situated to the south of the village, and, being nearly covered with ivy, forms a very picturesque object in the landscape. The whole of the parish is adorned with very pleasing detached gentlemanly residences, and among the chief of them is Bentley Priory, one of the seats of the Marquis of Abercorn. It is an imposing brick structure, the apartments of which are sumptuously furnished, and embellished with many noble paintings and other works of art. It derives its name from a priory which formerly existed here, and in the grounds of which many Roman coins have been found. The Marquis derives his descent from Lord Claude Hamilton, third son of James, second Earl of Arran, and Duke of Chaterbault, who, having been amongst the most zealous of the partisans of Mary Queen of Scots, was by her son, James I. of England and VI. of Scotland, created, with a grant of the whole of the barony, Baron of Paisley in 1587. The son of that nobleman, James, the second Lord Paisley, was created Baron of Abercorn in 1603, and in 1606 advanced to the dignity of Earl of Abercorn, with the other dignities attached, of Baron Hamilton, Mountcastle, and Kilpatrick attached. His son James, second Earl of Abercorn, previous to attaining his principal title, had been advanced to the peerage of Ireland, with the title of Lord Hamilton, Baron of Strabane, which honour, upon his lordship's petition to Charles I., was transferred to his brother, the Hon. Claude Hamilton. The son of that nobleman, on the death of his cousin without issue, succeeded to the earldom of Abercorn, and was a zealous adherent of James II.; and having been outlawed in 1691, the barony of Strabane expired, but the earldom devolved to his brother Charles, the fifth Earl, to whom the title of Strabane had also been restored by the reversal of the attainder of his brother. He, however, died without issue, and the honours went to Captain Hamilton, a descendant of Sir George Hamilton, fourth son of the first Earl of Abercorn, and who took a distinguished part in the siege of Londonderry for William III. His lordship was also created Baron Mountcastle and Viscount Strabane. The grandson of that nobleman was, in 1786, created a peer of Great Britain by the title of Viscount Hamilton, of Hamilton, in the county of Leicester, and his son John James, the ninth Earl, was, in 1790, created Marquis of Abercorn, and subsequently installed a Knight of the Garter. The present peer, his grandson, succeeded his lordship in 1818, in the titles and estates. — The Earl of Wicklow has also a villa here, and the residences of the gentry are numerous and most pleasing. — The living (St. John the Evangelist), a rectory in the archd^y of Middlesex, and diocese of London, is valued at £10: pres. net income, £440: patron, Marquis of Abercorn: pres. incumbent, Hon. D.

STANMORE (LITTLE), MIDDLESEX, a parish in the hun^d of Gore, union of Hendon: 9 miles from London, 5 from Harrow, 6 from Watford. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — This place was at one time the seat of the Duke of Chandos, of whom, and of whose estate, we have given an account elsewhere, and who built a magnificent mansion called Canons, at a cost of about £250,000. In 1744 this palace was pulled down, and the chapel of which Handel was chapel-master is the only relic of its grandeur. Many of his best anthems were composed for Divine service here. The Independents have a chapel in the village. The church was chiefly rebuilt at the Duke's expense. The charities produce about £111 per annum. — The living is a rectory in the diocese of London: pres. net income, £382: patron, B. J. Armstrong, Esq.: pres. incumbent, G. B. The earliest was raised in the year 1500, by Thomas Sherrard, Esq., and it was afterwards repaired and renovated by William, Lord Sherard, baron of Letrym, in 1631, as appears by an inscription on the front. The other portions were built at subsequent periods. The church is an ancient structure, and contains many monuments of the Harborough family; among them is one by Rysbrach to the first Earl of Harborough. The noble earl, the proprietor of the domain, derives his descent from a family, evidently of Saxon origin, of the name of Shirard, who were persons of consideration at the time of the Conquest. Their representative, Geoffrey Sherard, Esq., high sheriff of Rutlandshire in 1468, 1480, and 1484, had two sons, the younger of whom, Robert, was ancestor of the baronets of Lobesthorpe; and from the elder descended the line which was ennobled in the person of William Sherard, Esq., who was created Baron Sherard of Leitrim, by James I., in 1622. The great-grandson of that nobleman, Bennet, the third baron, was enrolled amongst the peers of Great Britain, as Baron Harborough of Harborough, and Viscount Sherard of Stapleford, and was, in 1719, created Earl of Harborough. The present peer succeeded, as sixth earl, in 1807.

STEEP-HOLMES ISLAND, SOMERSET, a rock in the Bristol Channel, ten miles south-east of Cardiff. It rises to the height of 400 feet from the level of the sea, is about a mile and a half in circumference, and only accessible from the beach by two narrow passes on its south-eastern and south-western borders. A few rabbits burrow on the rock, and an immense number of sea-fowl build their nests in its crevices and overhanging cliffs. A priory was founded here in 1320, by Maurice, third Lord Berkeley, but no vestiges of it now remain. There is only one house on the island, which has been built for the accommodation of the fishermen by whom the neighbouring waters are frequented.

This gentleman is the head of a very ancient family, which at one time was seated at Penryn, in Cornwall, but which removed to Earth, in the parish of St. Stephen's, at an early period, in consequence of a marriage with the daughter of a very old family, by whom they acquired large estates. From that match was descended Richard Bond, Esq., one of whose grandsons was an alderman of London, and another lord mayor, and knighted. The descendant of the latter, Sir Thomas, was created a baronet by Charles II. The line, however, was continued through the elder son; and the family having in its several generations held a distinguished position in the county, is now represented by its head, John Bond, Esq., the present proprietor of the Grange, which was purchased in 1686 by Nathaniel Bond, Esq., sergeant-at-law, and thence became the principal residence of himself and his descendants.

STEPNEY, MIDDLESEX, a parish in the eastern suburbs of the metropolis, in the Tower division of the hun^d. of Ossulstone, union of Stepney, and forming, in fact, part of London—(which see): 2 miles from Stratford, 2 from Hackney. — The living is rectory, a peculiar; rated at £73. 6s. 8d.: gross income, £1,318: net income, £1,190: patron, Brasenose College, Oxford. New Church is a perpetual curacy: gross income, £250. St. Peter's is a perpetual curacy, of the annual value of £400. St. Thomas's, St. Philip's, All Saints, and Trinity, are also perpetual curacies, in the patronage of Brasenose College. Here are also a number of dissenting churches, including an Independent, formed in 1674, and others of the Huntingdonians, Wesleyan and Calvinistic Methodists, Society of Friends, &c. Bancroft's school, in Mile-end, Old-town, was founded in 1729, for the education of 100 boys, who, since 1803, have been boarded as well as clothed and instructed from the age of 7 to the age of 14 years. The funds are vested in the Drapers' Company. The income of the headmaster, in 1833, is £220; that of the second, £120. There is a library attached to the school, and the education is a plain English one, though much improved. The Jews' hospital, in Mile-end, Old-town, established for the employment and education of youth, contained 43 males and 15 females, and is supported by an inviolate funded property vested in trustees. The Mile-end, Old-town, charity school contained 186 males and 120 females; 60 of the former, and 40 of the latter being annually clothed: income, about £180 per annum. The Stepney meeting-school, supported by the Independents, and by endowment, contained 130 males and 70 females; one-half of them being clothed. The Cambridge-road school, attended by 30 males and 30 females, 50 of them being clothed; and the Wycliffe chapel school for 35 females, have also been maintained by the Independents or Congregational dissenters, partly by subscription and partly by endowment. There is a college here for the education of ministers of the Baptist denomination. Fuller's almshouses, in Eagle-street, Mile-end road, consist of twelve rooms, inhabited by 12 poor and aged single men of the original parish of Stepney; income, £50 per annum. Pemel's almshouses, Mile-end, were founded in 1681, and are inhabited by eight widows, four of them of freemen of the Company of Drapers, and the remainder of mariners, inhabitants of the original parish of Stepney; income, £52. 12s. per annum. Bowry's almshouses are situated in Limehouse parish—(which see.) Cook's almshouses, in Mile-end, Old-town, consist of eight rooms, intended for poor seamen and widows of the parish of Stepney, and were founded by Captain James Cook, and his widow Dame Alice Row. The Skinners, Vintners, &c., have also almshouses here. The London hospital was founded in 1740, and is now one of the most extensive and useful in the kingdom; it is entirely supported by voluntary contributions. There are a number of minor charities, such as Curtis's for behoof of small debtors in prison belonging to Stepney, Limehouse, &c., Coburn's for poor widows of seamen, &c. It is a curious circumstance that all children born at sea are supposed to belong by law to the parish of Stepney; and, in consequence of that, paupers born at sea have been sent here from almost every parish in the kingdom. — Contains, with Poplar, 2,130 acres: 11,215 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 63,723: ass^d prop^y £193,408: poor rates in 1848, £10,047.

STEVENAGE, HERTFORD, a parish and formerly a market town in the hun^{d.} of Broadwater, union of Hitchin: 29 miles from London (coach road 31), 6 from Baldock, 5 from Hitchin. — Gt. Nor. Rail. to Stevenage station: from Derby, through Syston and Peterborough to Stevenage, 130 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^{d.} 7 a.m.: post closes 10 p.m. — This place, which is of pleasing appearance, originally formed part of the domains of the Saxon kings, and was by Edward the Confessor given to the abbey of Westminster; on the suppression of which monastic institution, it was by Edward VI. conferred on the see of London, to which the manor now belongs. The town consists of one long street, with three or four other smaller ones diverging from it, and contains many good houses. The church stands nearly a mile from the town, but is very pleasantly situated, the approach to it being through a fine avenue of trees. At the east end of the edifice there is a fine stained glass window, representing the four Evangelists, presented by George Smyth, Esq., of this town. The free grammar-school was founded and endowed in the reign of Philip and Mary, by the Rev. Thomas Allen, who also left property producing something more than £5 a year for the benefit of the poor. An almshouse for three poor persons, endowed by various benefactions to the amount of £31. 9s. per annum, was founded here in 1507 by Stephen Hellard. The other charities bring in about £20 a year, which is distributed in bread and clothing. The resident gentry are numerous. There was formerly a market on Friday, but it has fallen into disuse. Petty sessions for the division are held here, and a manorial court is constituted annually by the Bishop of London. — The living (St. Nicholas), a rectory in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £32. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £603: patron, W. R. Baker, Esq.: pres. incumbent, G. B. Blomfield, 1834: contains 4,640 acres: 362 houses: pop^{n.} in 1841, 1,725: do. in 1851, 2,300: ass^{d.} prop^{r.} £5,001: poor rates in 1848, £692. — Fairs: ninth day before Whit-Monday, first Friday in Sept., for cheese, pedlery, and small wares. — Inns: White Lion, and White Horse. — About three miles to the eastward is Knebworth Park, the seat of Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, Bart., for which see KNEBWORTH.

Rail. to Basingstoke, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Basingstoke, &c., 144 miles. — Money orders issued at Overton: London letters deliv^{d.} 9 a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m. — The living (St. Nicholas), a rectory in the archd^{y.} and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £11. 4s. 7d.: pres. net income, £485: patron, Edward Knight, Esq.: pres. incumbent, William Knight, 1823: contains 2,100 acres: 32 houses: pop^{n.} in 1851, 183: ass^{d.} prop^{r.} £1,636: poor rates in 1848, £116. 13s. Tithes commuted in 1839. — The Manor-house, occupied by the chief farmer in the parish, is a highly picturesque object. It stands on high ground, about 200 yards from the church, commanding an extensive view, terminating, towards the north-west, in the Highclere hills, near Newbury. It is built of flint, the casements of stone, with an unusually wide oriel window looking north-west. The towering chimneys are beautifully covered with large masses of ivy. What remains is supposed to be one wing, or a third part of a large Elizabethan house, with gable ends, standing in the midst of some fine old sycamores.

STEVEINGTON, BEDFORD, a parish in the hun^{d.} of Willey, union of Bedford, on the river Ouse: 68 miles from London (coach road 55), 5 from Bedford, 7 from Olney. — Nor. West. STOCKPORT, CHESTER, a parish, borough, township, and market town, in the hun^d of Macclesfield, union of Stockport, at the junction of the Mersey with the Tame: the parish comprises the chapelries and townships of Bramhall, Bredbury, Brinnington, Distley, Dukinfield, Hyde, Marple, Norbury, Offerton, Romily, Stockport, Torkington, Wernith, and part of Etchells: 182 miles from London (coach road 176), 7 from Manchester, 12 from Macclesfield. —Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe to Stockport station: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 82 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m. and 4½ p.m.: post closes 8½ a.m. and 10 p.m. —There appears to have been a Roman station on Castlehill, from which several roads, formed by that people, diverged, the fort occupying the summit of the rise, and on the site of which the Saxons afterwards founded a fortification. Though not mentioned in Domesday Book, Stockport is a place of great antiquity; and the castle or fort just alluded to is supposed to have given its name to the place, which has been severally called Stockfort, Storefort, and, as now, Stockport; being made a free borough by Robert, Earl of Chester, by the permission of Edward I. During the great civil war between Charles I. and his parliament, Stockport was garrisoned in the first instance by the parliamentarians, was taken by assault by Prince Rupert, but ultimately recovered by his opponents. During the incursions of the Pretender, Charles Edward, in 1745, the bridge was blown up, in order to prevent the retreat of the rebels after their advance to Derby, but they contrived to cross the river, and it was subsequently replaced. Stock-port is a place of somewhat singular aspect, for it is seated on the rise of a precipitous acclivity of very various elevation, declining chiefly towards the north, on which side the several houses and streets, on a winter evening, when the warehouses are lighted with gas, present a very extraordinary appearance, tier above tier rising in an amphitheatrical form, and in the most romantic manner, while the surrounding scenery is in the extreme bold and picturesque. There are four bridges over the Mersey in or near to the town, beside the viaduct which carries the railway. The old bridge has but one arch, which, however, is built so high that sea-craft can pass under it without lowering their masts, giving at the same time full tidal way to the general force of the stream. Below this is a bridge of eleven arches, which crosses the river at an elevation of forty feet above the water, many of the dry arches being built on the Cheshire bank. This bridge was erected in order that the Manchester and Brixton turnpike-road should avoid the awkward and dangerous ascent of the site of the town. The parish church and the market-place occupy an extensive level on the summit of the rocks, but the streets leading to them are both narrow and steep. Beside the ordinary places of worship, the town-hall, the grammar-school, the theatre, the infirmary, and the new-rooms, are the principal buildings. The town is well paved, well lighted, and abundantly supplied with water, and watched under the provisions of a local act. Stockport is one of the principal seats of the cotton manufacture, there being sixteen mills within the parish, and nearly 20,000 artisans employed in the business, the attendant establishments of printing and bleaching being necessarily adjoined. One of the most remarkable features of the place is the noble viaduct of 1,780 feet in length, over which the railway is carried. The living of the parish is a rectory, rated at £70. 6s. 8d.; gross income, £2,201; net income, £1,882; patron in 1841, Lady Vernon.—St. Peter's is a perpetual curacy; gross income, £220; patron in 1841, L. Wright, Esq.—St. Thomas's is also a perpetual curacy; gross income, £135; patron, the rector. For other livings in the parish, see the respective chapelries or townships. There are five Independent churches, formed in 1700, 1786, 1806, 1817, and 1822; a Presbyterian, formed in 1723; two Wesleyan Methodist, in 1823 and 1826; a Primitive Methodist, in 1827; a Baptist, in 1836; and places of worship for the Society of Friends, Roman Catholics, &c. The free grammar-school stands a little west of the town, and forms an interesting object on the road from London to Manchester; it was erected by the Goldsmiths' Company of London, and opened in 1832 for the education of 150 pupils in classical and scientific learning, free of expense. The salary of the master is £210 per annum, with house and fuel; and of the first usher, £105 per annum. The other schools are numerous, and for the place they may be called complete, having associated with them bible societies, lending libraries, and all the other intellectual and spiritual provisions that could be required, or are needful for so large a community. Warren's almshouses were founded in 1683, and endowed by their founder and Viscountess Bulkeley for six poor old men, each of whom receives about 30s. a year; the residue of the funds is chiefly spent in clothing and other necessities for the poor. The other endowed charities yield about £130 per annum. Stockport was anciently incorporated, but under the municipal corporation act it is divided into six wards, governed by fourteen aldermen and twenty-two common councillors; a commission of the peace having been granted to the borough, the corporate income being something more than £1,500 a year. The Stockport poor-law union comprises seventeen parishes, with a population of about 72,000 persons, spread over an area of 52 square miles. — Contains 24,810 acres: 11,925 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 84,282: ass^d prop^r £93,368: poor rates in 1848, £4,866. 2s. — Market day, Friday. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, York, and Darlington, to Stockton station: from Derby, through York, &c., 133 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 9½ a.m.: post closes 4 and 6½ p.m. — This is one of the most ancient, as well as one, in its peculiar locality, of the most important ports in, or rather of, England; for Robert de Stoketon, in the reign of Richard I., "sailed the Bishop of Durham's great ship to London," and received the magnificent reward of 13s. 4d. for his trouble and skill. The bishop thus alluded to was Bishop Pudsey, who was at that time resident at Stockton Castle. The castle, from all accounts, appears to have been, as the term was then, "a brave and noble edifice," but certainly an extensive and apparently most imposing structure, and continued, in much of its pristine grandeur, the residence of the bishops of Durham, until the civil war occurred between Charles I. and his parliament, when the learned and, in many respects—perhaps in all respects—venerable and learned Bishop Morton was obliged to seek safety from it by flight. It was subsequently in the possession of the adherents of Charles and the Scots, and ultimately of the Parliament, by the last of whom it was dismantled, and in 1652 razed to the ground. The town is situated on the side of an eminence on the northern side of the river, over which there are two bridges—one on the suspension principle, over which the Middlesborough Railway is carried; and the other on the ordinary principle, a stone structure of five arches, erected in 1764. The principal, the High street, is broad and spacious, lined with houses and shops of the highest respectability, and extending for nearly a mile in length from north to south. Near the middle of it is the town-hall, a handsome structure, with four fronts, surmounted by a lofty and pleasing spire. It contains a court-room, news-room, assembly-rooms, a tavern, and numerous other accommodations. On the north side, for the accommodation of the market people, a piazza has been constructed, who used to assemble about the old cross that stood there, where now a fine Doric column has been erected. The custom-house is situated on the wharf or quay, which runs along the bank of the river parallel with High Street. Races are held here annually in August, on a space called the Carra, on the Yorkshire side of the river, opposite the town, where there is a good course about a mile in circuit. The living of the parish is a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Durham; gross income, £294: patron, the Bishop. The church is a large and commodious edifice of brick, with a tower 80 feet high. Trinity is a perpetual curacy. A Presbyterian church was formed here in 1668, an Independent in 1799, a Wesleyan Methodist in 1824; and there are also places of worship for Baptists, Primitive Methodists, the Society of Friends, and the Roman Catholics. One of the schools, containing 203 males and 70 females, educated on the national system, is supported by endowment: income about £300 per annum, with part of which 40 boys and 40 girls are clothed. Here are almshouses consisting of 36 apartments. There is also a dispensary. Other charities about £50 per annum. Stockton is a burgh by prescription, but, under the municipal act, it is divided into two wards, and governed by 6 aldermen and 18 common councillors, under the usual corporate style. Their public income is about £1,200 a year. The trade is derived from maritime necessities, and the supply of domestic necessities for the surrounding districts. The Stockton poor-law union comprises 41 parishes, with a population of about 45,000, spread over an area of 103 square miles. Contains 4,190 acres: 1,397 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 10,071: ass^d prop^r £15,800: poor rates in 1848, £1,852. 3s. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Thomas Gray was born in London in 1716, was educated at Eton College and Peterhouse, Cambridge, and subsequently entered himself at the Inner Temple with a view of studying for the bar; but becoming intimate with Horace Walpole, he set out to accompany him in his tour through Europe. Through some disagreement they parted at Reggio in Italy, and Gray returned to England in 1741. He then occupied himself in several literary schemes; but it was not until 1747 that his "Ode on a Distant View of Eton College" made its appearance; and it was only owing to the printing of a surreptitious copy, that his "Elegy, written in a Country Churchyard," came, in 1751, regularly before the world. He declined the poet-laureateship on the death of Cibber in 1757, and, in the same year, brought out his "Bard," and his "Ode on the Progress of Poetry." In 1768 he was presented, by the Duke of Grafton, with the professorship of modern history at Cambridge, which produced him about £400 a year. Though he published but few poems—and those on which his fame principally rests are short—Gray was a man of varied and profound erudition, skilled in natural history, and intimately acquainted with the architecture of the ancients. He died in 1771 at Cambridge, but his body was removed to Stoke-Poges

Tanner, in speaking of it, says—Wolphere, the first Christian king of Mercia, founded here a college of secular canons, about A.D. 670, in honour of his two sons, Wulfadus and Rufinus, whom he had, before his conversion, barbarously murdered with his own hands, at or near this place. The canons being dispersed during the Danish wars about the time of the Conquest, some few nuns seem to have been in possession of this place, who, by the means of Robert de Stafford, were changed, temp. Hen. I., into a convent of regular canons from Kenelworth, to which house this priory was a cell till about the year 1260, when another lord, Robert Stafford, got it freed from any subjection to Kenelworth, save only the right of patronage and a yearly provision. The Black canons of Stone were endowed, 26th Hen. VIII., with £120 per annum, or, after deductions, with clear £119. 14s. 11d., ob. as in Speed. The principal manufacture is that of shoes, but on the banks of the Trent there are several corn mills, besides which there are two large breweries, and the principal office of the Grand Trunk Canal is situated here. This was the birth-place of the celebrated admiral, Sir John Jervis, Earl St. Vincent, whose biography is given in another part of this work. In such a community as this, as might be expected, every appliance for domestic, social, and intellectual enjoyment is provided, and the Dissenters have abundant places of worship. In Stonefield, adjacent to the town, the Duke of Cumberland drew up his army in 1745, when in pursuit of the Pretender, Charles Edward. The Stone poor-law union comprises ten parishes, with a population of about 18,000 persons, spread over an area of 119 square miles. — The living (St Wolfad), a perpetual curacy in the archdi^c of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £4. 13s.: pres. net income, £214: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, G. Lucas, 1839: contains 20,030 acres: 1,467 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 8,349: ass^d prop^r £31,756: poor rates in 1848, £2,460. 5s. Tithes commuted in 1798 and 1808. — Fairs, each alternate Tuesday, commencing Jan. 8, 1850. Races in October. — Banker: William Moore—draw on Glyn, Halifax, & Co. — Blue Bell Inn, and Crown Hotel.

STONEGRAVE, NORTH RIDING, YORK, a parish in the hund^d of Ryedale, union of Helmsley: the parish includes the townships of East Newton and Laysthorpe, Stonegrave, and West Ness: 234 miles from London (coach road 217), 2 from Oswaldkirk, 5 from Helmsley. — Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, and York, to Raskelf station, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 102 miles. — Money orders issued at York: London letters deliv^d 11 a.m.: post closes 2 p.m. — Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—At Hode, there was originally an hermitage for a monk of Whilby, but, A.D. 1138, it was given by Roger Mowbray to a convent of Cistercian monks, who were driven from Calder in Cumberland by the incursions of the Scots. Here they continued four or five years, and then were removed to Byland. Afterward Samson de Albiny giving them some other lands and tithes in exchange, this place was granted to the monastery of Newburgh, and a cell of Black canons from thence fixed for some time here, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin. The charities produce about £5 a year. — The living, a rectory in the archd^y of Cleveland, and diocese of York, is valued at £33. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £495: patron, the Crown: pres. incumbent, T. Barnes, 1815: contains 2,490 acres: 65 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 351: ass^d. prop^r £3,632: poor rates in 1848, £86. 14s. Tithes commuted in 1776.

STONEHAM (NORTH), HANTS, a parish in the hund^d of Mansbridge, union of South Stoneham, Fawley division of the county, watered by the river Itchin: 84 miles from London (coach road 71), 4 from Southampton, 8 from Winchester. — Sou. West. Rail. to Southampton, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Southampton, &c., 181 miles. — Money orders issued at Southampton: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 9 p.m. — In 1720, Mr. Edward Dummer gave £320 for erecting a school-house, and an annuity of £5 for the education of five boys here. — The living (St. Nicholas), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £21. 9s. 7d.: pres. net income, £536: patron, J. Fleming, Esq.: pres. incumbent, F. Beadon, 1811: contains 5,900 acres: 142 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 871: ass^d. prop^r £3,456: poor rates in 1848, £474. 1s. — Stoneham House is the seat of John Willis Fleming, Esq., whose father for many years represented Southampton in parliament. The mansion, which is placed in a rather low situation, is extensive and imposing, and is surrounded by an extensive and well-wooded park, having a summer-house at the upper end, from which there are some beautiful and extensive views. The church, which stands within the park, contains a fine monument of Admiral Lord Hawke. — Woodside is the seat of Robert Gordon Ricketts, Esq.

STONEHAM (SOUTH), HANTS, a parish, partly in the county of the town of Southampton, but chiefly in the hund^d of Mansbridge, union of South Stoneham, watered by the Itchin; it has also a canal to Winchester: 73 miles from London, 8 from Southampton, 5 from Botley. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — The South Stoneham poor-law union comprises three parishes, with a population of about 10,000 persons, spread over an area of 43 square miles. — The living (Virgin Mary), a vicarage, a peculiar in the diocese of Winchester, is valued at £12: pres. net income, £500: patron, Rector of St. Mary, Southampton: pres. incumbent, W. D. Harrison: contains 8,260 acres: 440 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,763: ass^d. prop^r £5,538: poor rates in 1848, £1,197. 12s. Tithes, vicarial, commuted in 1820.

STONEHENGE, WILTS. — As this singular monument of ancient faith is placed in an inhabited district, and the parish of Amesbury, we have thought it better to notice its particulars under its proper head. This "wonder of the west," says an intelligent writer, as it has been called, consists of a number of immense stones, averaging 3 feet in thickness, 6 to 7 feet in breadth, and 18 to 20 feet in length; most of them must weigh about 10 to 12 tons, but a few must exceed 30 tons, and the two largest even 70 tons. Some of these tremendous blocks are now lying prostrate, but they all appear to have formerly been erected, as many of them still are, in the order of two concentric circles, enclosing two concentric ovals or ellipses, with one immense stone in the centre by itself. The whole design is surrounded by an exterior concentric circle of comparatively great circumference, consisting of an outer ditch and an inner wall of earth or vallum, connected with which are three great stones and three grand entrances to the system of circles and ellipses in the centre. The exterior circular range of stones appears to have been coped continuously round with a series of equally immense square stones, planted across the tops of the uprights, and fixed by mortises and tenons formed with a chisel. Some of these are prostrate; others are in the exalted position in which it is almost inconceivable how they could be placed without great mechanical knowledge and power. The outer oval also, the grandeur of which even exceeds all the other portions of this strange design, has been formed of five distinct pairs of trilithons, consisting each of two stupendous stones, with a third, of 16 feet in length, laid neatly over them as an impost. The largest of these trilithons was centrally placed in the west, opposite to the eastern entrance, and measured, when standing, exclusive of its impost, 28 feet in height, while the extreme ones at the open end of the oval are only 16, the whole range rising gradually from east to west. The interior oval is supposed to have consisted of 19 uprights, of a somewhat pyramidal shape, without imposts, and increasing in height also towards the west. The hearth-stone, or altar-stone, as it is usually called, which occupies the interior of this inner oval, and must have constituted the grand centre of attraction or significance in the mysterious purposes, whatever these may be, to which the whole scheme must have been devoted, measures 15 feet in length; it is now almost covered by the two fallen stones of the great trilithon, by which also it has been broken into several pieces. The two concentric stone circles are only about 8 feet apart, and between them is a passage of about 300 feet in circumference, round which it is impossible for the beholder to walk without the most solemn awe and astonishment; to which, indeed, the mind must have previously become attuned, by the solitary isolation of the immense and dreary expanse of unvaried plain, in the midst of which this striking and imposing relic stands, totally dissociated and alone. Everything, as has been justly remarked of various sacred edifices of the ancients still in India, Ethiopia, and Egypt—here, in like manner, though in a form more rude and primitive—appears to have been expressly and laboriously designed to fix, arrest, and concentrate the attention, by calling forth and filling the whole mind with an unitive idea of immensity, an entranced feeling of astonishment, and an energetic consciousness of power. The fact, that, to the thoughtful, no less than to the ignorant mind, the whole sublime concatenation of this "wonder of ages," as it has been really designated, does unite to call forth such a consciousness, and feeling, and idea, seems to form no slight corroboration of the truth of the very prevalent belief, that Stonehenge—the "Ambre-stones," or "Holy-stones," of "Ambresbury," was designed for the exercise of solemn and impressive sacred rites, however superstitious. And, on a general consideration of its singular details, the grounds of this belief are found to be very strong indeed. The priesthood of the ancient Britons were the Druids, to whose sacred rites it is well known that numerous other circles of a somewhat similar, though less imposing, and, it may be, more provincial character, are thought to have been subservient. Hence the formation of Stonehenge also has been generally attributed to the Druids. Some, however, have rather inclined to believe that it was a place of national assembly, or a court of justice, such as our supreme courts, and such as certainly were in general held in the open air in ancient times. But even such a supposition only strengthens the probability, that its original idea and design were of a sacred character; for the kingly and the priestly dignity were united in the more remote ages; and even in the less remote, the offices of priest and judge were still united; and, indeed, the immolation of criminals by the Druids on their altars was no less significant of their interference and instrumentality in the dispensation of judicial functions, than their stern resistance to the Romans, by enthusiastic exhortations and enchantments, was of their collateral interference and instrumentality in the exercise of political power. These opinions appear to have prevailed through a series of ages, and the following lines do not unpleasingly embody them:—

Thou noblest monument of Albion's Isle!
Whether by Merlin's aid from Scythia's shore
To Amber's fatal plain Pendragon bore.
Huge frame of giant hands, the mighty pile,
T' entomb his Britons slain by Hengist's guile;
Or Druid priests, sprinkled with human gore,
Taught mid thy massy maze their mystic lore;
Or Danish chiefs, enriched with savage spoil,
To victory's idol vast, an unhewn shrine,
Rear'd the rude heap; or, in thy hallow'd round,
Repose the kings of Brutus' genuine line;
Or here those kings, in solemn state, were crowned;
Studious to trace thy wondrous origin,
We muse on many an ancient tale renown'd.

STONEHOUSE, GLOUCESTER, a parish in the lower division of the hun^d of Whitstone, union of Stroud, intersected by the Stroudwater Canal: the parish comprises the several hamlets of Ebley, Caincross, Westrip, and parts of Randwick: 103 miles from London (coach road 105), 3 from Stroud, 11 from Gloucester. —Gt. West. Rail. through Swindon to Stonehouse station: from Derby, through Birmingham to Stonehouse, 103 miles. —Money orders issued at Stroud: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m. —The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels in the village. The charities produce about £51 a year. Near this is an excellent chalybeate spring. There are several woollen manufactories here, in which upwards of 400 hands are employed, the mechanics being of a somewhat remarkable character. A living writer says of them— "The weavers here, with but one or two exceptions, are superior to the generality of weavers in other districts: they are mostly master weavers, not on a large scale, but with perhaps two looms. I did not observe more than two in any of the houses; their children were decently clad, and the appearance of the families altogether presented an air of domestic comfort, which may be looked for in vain among the generality of the weavers. Yet, upon inquiry, these men earn little or no more than other weavers who have tolerably constant work; but they have always been frugal, sober, and industrious, preferring, after the toil of the day, the more rational pleasure of social music to the revelry and drunkenness of the alehouse. In several houses I found musical instruments, basses, violins, clarionets, and flutes, and I was informed that some of the weavers play very well, and take their parts in the Philharmonic concerts at Stroud, with good musicians from Cheltenham. Those whose pretensions to the science are of a more humble stamp, may be seen performing at church or chapel on Sundays; and though they are not so familiar with Handel or Mozart as the others, no doubt partake of equal pleasure, and are capable of inspiring an almost equal delight. Not only were the houses of the weavers clean, neat, and well furnished, but in many instances a respectable little library was to be seen. In former days, when trade was good and wages high, it would have been difficult to select a cottage in which was not its little library of books hung up on shelves, about three or four in number, attached by cords and suspended from the wall. In all the other parishes I scarcely found a relic of a book-shelf. At Stonehouse I observed the books neatly bound, and put up in the way I have described. All the books were of a decidedly religious character; such is generally the case. Thus, in reading and music, they find enjoyment at once rational and useful; the result of which is, well-furnished and comfortable homes, a change of clothes for Sundays, and the satisfaction of a good character. The means of education here is strictly religious; in fact, it is difficult to find a free school, whether Sunday or daily, that is not exclusively of that character. In conclusion, I beg to observe, that Stonehouse is altogether an exception to the general rule, being situate in the heart of a manufacturing district, where every mill is at full work, wages good, employment constant, and the masters are benevolent and kind." —The living, a vicarage in the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol, is valued at £22: pres. net income, £510: patron, the Crown: pres. incumbent, Henry Cripps, 1826: contains 2,260 acres: 516 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,711: ass^d. prop^r. £6,827: poor rates in 1848, £568. 5s. Tithes commuted in 1840. —Fairs: May 1 and October 11.

STONEHOUSE (EAST), DEVON, a parish adjoining Plymouth, with which it is connected by a new and handsome road, but within the parliamentary borough of Devonport, hun^d of Roborough, union of East Stonehouse: this place forms part of the three towns of Stonehouse, Devonport, and Plymouth, the last of which see for access, postal arrangements, &c.: 220 miles from London, 1 from Plymouth, 1 from Devonport. —Money orders issued at Plymouth: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 4.40 p.m. —Some trifling charities belong to the chapelry. The parish derives its name from Joel de Stonehouse, who was lord of the manor in the reign of Henry III. The town consists of several handsome streets, well paved and lighted with gas. It is supplied with water brought in pipes from the reservoir of the Devonport Water Company, and from a fine stream brought into the town in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. A neat stone bridge, carried over Stonehouse Creek, gives an easy communication with Devonport. On what is called the Devil's-Nose, there is a fort. At a short distance are the Western and Eastern King's Batteries. Indeed, the peninsula called Cremhill-point—the south-west end of Millbay—is all strongly fortified. The new victualling-office here has been constructed on a large scale. The naval hospital, for the reception of wounded seamen and marines, is an important public establishment. There are also extensive barracks. The town participates in the general business and prosperity of Plymouth and Devonport. It is within the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold their sessions in the court-hall at Devonport. A manorial court leet and baron is held annually. The East Stonehouse union comprises only the chapelry. St. Paul's, the chief place of worship, is a perpetual curacy. Almost every branch of the dissenting church have chapels here. The living, a perpetual curacy, within the archd^y and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £8. 14s. 4d.: pres. net income, £197: patron, Vicar of St. Andrew's, Plymouth: contains 976 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 9,712: ass^d prop^r £17,909: poor rates in 1848, £3,005. 14s.

STONELEIGH, WARWICK, a parish and village in Kenilworth division of the hun^d of Knightlow, union of Warwick, on the banks of the Avon: 99 miles from London (coach road 91), 5 from Coventry, 6 from Warwick. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Coventry, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, &c., 66 miles. Money orders issued at Coventry: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. In the village there are a range of almshouses, with an income of £29 a year. They were founded by Lady Alice, the wife of Sir Thos. Leigh, lord mayor of London at the accession of Queen Elizabeth. The other charities produce about £92 a year. Before the Norman invasion, this domain was invested in the crown, and so continued until the time of Edward II. At the dissolution of the monasteries, Henry VIII. granted it to his brother-in-law, Charles Brandon, Duke of Suffolk, whose line becoming extinct, it passed to the Sir Thos. Leigh named above, whose second son, Thomas, was created a baronet, and whose grandson was, for his adherence to the cause of Charles I., raised to the peerage, by the title of Baron Leigh, of Stoneleigh. On the decease of Edward, the fifth baron, the barony descended to his sister, and is now in the possession of Chandos, her descendant, whose genealogy and family history we have noticed elsewhere. The abbey constitutes the principal attraction of the place, but the village is exceedingly picturesque, and the park around the mansion beautiful, being delightfully varied, and adorned with a magnificent array of ancient oaks. The living (the Virgin Mary), a vicarage in the diocese of Worcester, is valued at £6. 15s. 5d.: pres. net income, £510: patron, Lord Leigh: pres. incumbent, V. Thomas, 1804: contains 8,680 acres: 258 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,371: poor rates in 1848, £1,013. 19s.

The church is an ancient structure, but elegant and spacious, with an elevated tower and spire, and contains some very interesting monuments. An elegant and commodious market-house was erected here in 1828. Connected with it there are assembly and coffee rooms, and offices for the meetings of the magistrates of the county. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, have places of worship here. The charities, including the endowment of three almshouses, produce about £240 a year, part of which is expended in educating and apprenticing poor children. There was at one time a castle here, built by King Stephen, but which was razed to the ground by King John, who took the town into his own possession, incorporating the inhabitants, and bestowing upon them many valuable privileges, which continued till the time of Edward III. This is one of the polling-places for the county election. The Bishop-Stortford poor-law union comprises twenty parishes, with a population of about 18,500 persons, spread over an area of 83 square miles. —The living (St. Michael), a vicarage, with the curacy of Hockerhill, in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £12: pres. net income, £419: patron, Precentor of St. Paul's: pres. incumbent, F. STOURBRIDGE, WORCESTER, a market town in the parish of Old Swinford, union of Stourbridge, on the river Stour: 140 miles from London (coach road 126), 7 from Kidderminster, 10 from Wolverhampton. —Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford, Worcester, and Kidderminster, to Stourbridge station: from Derby, through Birmingham and Dudley to Stourbridge, 59 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 4½ p.m.: post closes 7.20 p.m. —The town is seated on an elevation rising gently from the river Stour, at the extremity of what may be called the mid-land manufacturing district. The streets are irregularly built, but the appearance of the place is upon the whole highly respectable. The name is evidently derived from the bridge over the river. Though now a populous town, we have no record of its existence prior to the reign of Henry VI., when it appears to have been a hamlet or chapelry of Swinford. The chapel is built of brick, in a very good style of architecture. Stourbridge was made parochial, and the edifice just spoken of was erected by subscription in 1742. The principal branches of trade are the manufacture of glass of all descriptions, established as long ago as 1557; the abundance of fuel, and the peculiar kind of clay adapted for glass-house pots, giving the district a singular advantage; while coal and ironstone have been worked from a very early period. The clay is admirably adapted for crucibles and fire-bricks, those made from it possessing the property of not contracting on exposure to the strongest heat, and thus they have been brought into extensive use in gas-works and other similar establishments, where arches of a wide span are required. There are also cast and wrought-iron works here on a very large scale. The free grammar-school, which contains an excellent library, and is endowed with about £460 per annum, was founded in the reign of Edward VI. The Wesleyans, Baptists, Society of Friends, Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics, have chapels in the town. The petty sessions are held here, and this is one of the polling-places for the county. The Stourbridge poor-law union comprises 14 parishes, with a population of about 36,000 persons, spread over an area of 25 square miles. The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Worcester: pres. net income, £134: patron, Householders: pres. incumbent, G. Wells, 1833: contains 1,202 acres: 5,974 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 7,481: poor rates in 1848, £1,539. 13s. Market day, Friday. Fairs: Jan. 8, March 29, Sept. 8. Bankers: Stourbridge and Kidderminster Banking Co.—draw on Smith, Payne, & Co.; Ruffords and Wragge—draw on Glyn, Halifax, & Co.; Bate and Robins—draw on Masterman, Peters, & Co.—Falcon and Vine Inns; Talbot Hotel.

STOURMOUTH, Kent, a parish in the hun^d of Bleangate, union of Eastry, lathe of St. Augustine: the Stour, which is here navigable, flows by the parish: 92 miles from London (coach road 63), 10 from Canterbury, 12 from Margate. Sou. East. Rail. to Canterbury, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 224 miles. Money orders issued at Wingham: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. Fine views over the marshes and the river into the Isle of Thanet, are commanded from the parish. The living (All Saints), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £19: pres. net income, £399: patron, Bishop of Rochester: pres. incumbent, Richard Drake: contains 877 acres: 37 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 253: ass^d prop^y £2,146: poor rates in 1848, £115. 6s.

STOURPAINE, Dorset, a parish in the hun^d of Pimperne, union of Blandford, Blandford division, on the river Stour: 128 miles from London (coach road 104), 3 from Blandford, 9 from Shaftesbury. Sou. West. Rail. through Southampton to Wimborne-Minster, thence 13 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Wimborne, &c., 217 miles. Money orders issued at Blandford: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. On an elevation, called Hod's Hill, there are remains of an ancient British intrenchment, and also of a Roman encampment, which appear, from the coins found there, to have been held as a station through the reigns of several emperors from Tiberius downwards. The living (Holy Trinity), a dioc^h vicarage, a peculiar, is valued at £7. 18s. 6½d.: pres. net income, £130: patron, Dean and Chapter of Salisbury: pres. incumbent, R. W. Ford, 1810: contains 2,250 acres: 113 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 637: ass^d prop^y £1,141: poor rates in 1848, £328. 3s.

STOURPORT, Worcester, a market town in the parish of Lower Mitton: 129 miles from London (coach road 123), 3 from Bewdley, 4 from Kidderminster. Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford and Worcester to Stourport station: from Derby, through Birmingham and Worcester to Stourport, &c., 82 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 5.40 p.m. The town is situated at the confluence of the rivers Severn and Stour, and on the basin of the Staffordshire Canal, where it falls into the Severn, which is here crossed by an iron bridge of one arch of 150 feet span, and elevated 50 feet above the bed of the stream. This place, which, before the formation of the Worcester and Staffordshire Canal, consisted of only a few insignificant cottages, has now risen into a handsome populous town, with its principal streets well paved, but very badly lighted. The chief trade consists in the transmission of goods, but there is a tolerable business done in corn, coal, timber, and other products of the district. There are also two spinning-mills, a large tanyard, and a carpet manufactory in the town, which, although in the very centre of the county, has assumed all the appearance of a maritime port. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. Stourport is one of the polling-places for the western division of the county. The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Worcester: patron, Vicar of Kidderminster: pres. incumbent, S. R. Waller, 1849. (Popⁿ in 1851, with Lower Mitton, 2,993.) Market day, Wednesday. Fairs: First Tuesday in July, second Tuesday in April and October. Moor Hill, the seat of J. A. Taylor, Esq., formerly one of the members of the county, is in the parish.

STOUR-PROVOST (or PRIOR), Dorset, a parish and liberty in the hun^d of Redlue, union of Shaston, Shaston division of the county, on the river Stour: 5 miles from Shaston. Gt. West. Money orders issued at Shaston: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m. The national school here is endowed with £6 per annum. The living (St. Michael), a rectory, with that of Todbere annexed, in the diocese of Sarum, is valued at £16. 4s. 9½d.: pres. net income, £656: patron, King's College, Cambridge: pres. incumbent, R. A. Denton, 1844: contains 3,712 acres:

210 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 892: do. in 1851, 988: ass^d prop^r £5,193: poor rates in 1848, £559. 17s.: way rates, £180. 9s. 5d.

STOURTON, WARWICK, a hamlet in the parish of Whichford—(which see for access, &c.)—union of Shipston-upon-Stour: 82 miles from London, 4 from Shipston-upon-Stour, 11 from Banbury. Money orders issued at Shipston: London letters deliv^d 9½ a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. Contains 44 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 189: ass^d prop^r £1,634: poor rates in 1848, £95. 11s:

STOURTON, WILTS, a parish, partly in the hun^d. of Norton-Ferris, county of Somerset, but chiefly in the hun^d. of Mere, union of Mere, in the above county: the parish includes the hamlet of Brook or Gasper: 125 miles from London (coach road 103), 3 from Mere, 10 from Frome. Gt. West. Rail. through Chippenham to Frome, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Chippenham to Frome, &c., 184 miles. Money orders issued at Mere: London letters deliv^d 9½ a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. The name of the place is supposed to have been derived from the river Stour, which rises within its boundaries. The family of Stourton, which is of great antiquity, once possessed this and the whole of the surrounding property, the barons of Stourton having been located here before the Conquest; but in 1720, the estates, which had thus been held for so many centuries, were purchased by Henry Hoare, Esq., an eminent London banker, whose descendant, Sir Hugh Richard Hoare, Bart., of Stourhead Park, is the present possessor. The church is a small but very interesting edifice, in the pointed style adopted in the fourteenth century, containing many memorials of the Stourton family. In the churchyard is the mausoleum of the Hoare family, and an ancient cross. Sir Richard Colt Hoare, the munificent patron of literature and the arts, and himself the author of several topographical works, lies interred in this vault, having a tablet thus inscribed:—

"Hoc sepulchretum sibi et posteris Richardus Colt Hoare fieri curavit, anno MDCCCXL."

The village itself, like that of Woburn, is a model, all the houses and cottages being in admirable condition, and beautifully covered with roses, jessamines, clematis, and other climbing plants; while the pleasure-grounds and park of its honourable proprietor may be said to teem with sylvan beauties. An elegant mansion has been built by the ancestors of Sir Hugh on the site of the old castle of Stourton, and on the loftiest eminence in the domain a tower has been built in commemoration of King Alfred the Great, who there erected his standard after issuing from his retreat in the Isle of Athelney to combat the Danes, and which has therefore given to the height the name of King-settle hill. Under the statue of the king is this inscription:—

"Alfred the Great, A.D. 879, on this summit erected his standard against the Danish invaders. To him we owe the Institution of Juries and the creation of a naval force. Alfred, the light of a benighted age, was a philosopher and a Christian, the father of his people, and the founder of the English monarchy and liberties."

—The living (St. Peter), a rectory in the archd^y. and diocese of Sarum, is valued at £17: pres. net income, £520: patron, Sir H. H. Hoare: pres. incumbent, John Drake, 1846: contains 3,550 acres:

132 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 645: ass^d prop^r £3,821: poor rates in 1848, £299. Tithes commuted in 1839. —The mansion of Sir Hugh Richard Hoare, Bart., is replete with luxuriant taste, and most richly furnished with works of the fine arts of the greatest value, while the grounds around, as stated above, present every aspect of rural beauty.

"Throughout the various scenes above, below,
Lawns, walks, and slopes, with verdant carpets glow;
On the clear mirror float the inverted shades
Of woods, plantations, wildernesses, glades, Rocks, bridges, temples, grottoes, and cascades."

And in addition to all these advantages, there are a number of statues, temples, and other pleasing objects placed in various parts of the grounds. Sir Hugh derives his descent from the Henry Hoare, Esq., spoken of above, who was a gentleman of great refinement and high education, and whose father, Sir Richard Hoare, Knt., was lord mayor of London in 1713, and represented the city in parliament. The grandson of Sir Richard was also lord mayor of London during the memorable year of the rebellion of 1745; and his son, Sir Richard Hoare, was created a baronet in 1786, and was the grandfather of the present honourable baronet, who, in 1841, succeeded to the title and estates on the death of his father.

STOW, LINCOLN, a hamlet in the parish of Threckingham—(which see for access, &c.): 108 miles from London, 2 from Falkingham, 8 from Sleaford. —Contains 43 houses. Tithes commuted in 1768.

STOW, LINCOLN, a parish in the wapentake of Well, union of Gainsborough, parts of Lindsey: the parish comprises the townships of Bransby, Normanby, and Sturton: 150 miles from London (coach road 143), 8 from Gainsborough, 10 from Lincoln. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough and Lincoln to Marton station, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through Nottingham, Lincoln, &c., 62 miles. Money orders issued at Gainsborough: London letters deliv^d at noon: post closes 1½ p.m. —The church, which is very ancient, is a fine specimen of Saxon and Norman architecture, and has lately been renovated. The village, which consists of irregularly scattered houses, was originally built by the Romans, and is supposed by Bishop Gibson, and other authorities, to have been the seat of the primitive bishopric of Cidunaster, formed in 678 by Egfrid, king of Northumberland, and which was transferred to Lincoln immediately after the Norman Conquest. Tanner, in his Notitia Monastica, in speaking of this place, says,

"Here was a church, or minster, for secular priests, built to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary by Eadnoth, bishop of Dorchester, and much augmented by the benefactions of Earl Leofric, and his lady Godiva. After the Conquest, the religious here were changed into Benedictine monks under the government of an abbot, by Bishop Remigius, who got for them, of William Rufus, the then desolate abbey of Eynsham in Oxfordshire, whither his successor, Robert Bloet, removed this abbot and his monks, reserving Stow, Newark, and some other estates, to the see of Lincoln, for which he gave them in exchange Chorlebury," &c. Stowmarket consists of several streets, mostly well built, paved, and lighted, and is considered to be the most central place in the county. The principal trade carried on is that of making malt; but there are some considerable transactions also in coal, slate, and timber, besides which hops are cultivated to a large extent in the neighbourhood. The church is a spacious and handsome edifice, with a light and elegant spire, 120 feet in height; it contains the monument of Dr. Young, once vicar of this place, and tutor of the immortal Milton. The corn exchange and assembly-rooms also constitute a fine building, which was erected some few years ago, at a cost of about £3,000. The Independents, Baptists, and Primitive Methodists, have chapels here. This is one of the polling-places for the county. A manorial court-baron is held annually, and petty sessions every Monday. The Stow poor-law union comprises thirty-four parishes, with a population of about 18,500 persons, spread over an area of 89 square miles.—The living (the Virgin Mary and St. Peter), a vicarage, with that of Stow-Upland, in the archd^y of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £16. 15s.: pres. net income, £380: patron, Rev. Rail. through Oxford to Stow-on-the-Wold station: from Derby, through Birmingham and Worcester to Stow-on-the-Wold, 121 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m.—The town is irregularly built, mostly of stone, on the summit of a high hill, the base of which is about three miles in circumference. From its elevated situation, it is generally said to want three out of the four elements—fire, earth, and water; air it has in abundance, but, though sharp, its climate is always considered to be healthy. Water, however, is scarce. The streets are narrow, and but indifferently paved. The church is a somewhat massive edifice, apparently the work of different periods during the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, consisting of a nave, aisles, and chancel, with an embattled tower, eighty feet high at the west end, which, from its elevated situation, forms a constant object of interest for miles round. The interior is full of interesting architectural details, and contains many monuments of the Chamberlayne family, who for a long time have held the possession of this and the surrounding property. In the chancel there is a large altar-tomb to the memory of Duke Hastings Keyt, whose effigy lies upon it, and who, it appears, was an officer of Charles I. In 1847 it was repaired, and now affords accommodation for 718 worshippers. The town is governed by two constables, who are appointed annually at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the manufacture of shoes and boots for the surrounding district. One of the schools here was endowed by R. Sheepharn, Esq., with £40 per annum, and the same gentleman also endowed nine almshouses for poor persons. The other charities produce about £140 per annum, part of which is applied to the support of a national school. The Stow-on-the-Wold poor-law union comprises twenty-eight parishes, with a population of about 9,000 persons, spread over an area of about sixty-eight square miles.—Contains 3,130 acres: 404 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,140: ass^d prop^r £4,860: poor rates in 1848, £549. 19s. W. Ridley: pres. incumbent, R. Webster, 1833: contains 6,430 acres: 168 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,106: ass^d. prop^r. £3,073: poor rates in 1848, £211. 3s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

STRATA-FLORIDA (or CARON-UWCH-CLAWDD), CARDIGAN, a chapelry in the parish of Caron or Tref-Garon—(which see for access, &c.)—union of Tregaron, South Wales: 200 miles from London, 5 from Tregaron, 16 from Aberystwith. — Money orders issued at Lampeter: London letters deliv^d. 7½ p.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. — The famous abbey of Strata-Florida—for it became famous—was founded for Cistercian monks by Rhys-ap-Gryffid, who was Prince of Wales in 1164. It stood in a sequestered dale, surrounded by an amphitheatrical chain of mountains, but during the wars with Edward I. it was burnt down. It was, however, restored and flourished in more than its original splendour till the dissolution of the monasteries, when it shared their fate, and is now a heap of ruins. It was here that the records of the Principality were kept, from the year 1157 till the final defeat of Llewellyn, the last reigning prince; and here the remains of its chiefs were deposited through some centuries. — The living, a perpetual curacy in the archd^r. of Cardigan, and diocese of St. David's, is valued at £8: pres. net income, £80: patron, W. E. Powell, Esq.: pres. incumbent, T. Williams, 1823: contains 141 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 819: poor rates in 1848, £191. 13s.

STRATFIELD-MORTIMER, BERKS, a parish in the hun^d. of Theale, union of Bradfield: this parish includes the tithing of Wokefield: 42 miles from London (coach road 47), 8 from Reading, 8 from Basingstoke. — Gt. J. C. Harper: contains 4,500 acres: 151 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,169: ass^d. prop^r. £3,894: poor rates in 1848, £434. 18s.

STRATFIELD-SAYE, HANTS, a parish, partly in the hun^d. of Reading, county of Berks, but chiefly in the hun^d. of Holdshot, union of Basingstoke, Basingstoke division of the above county: it contains the tithing of Beech-hill: 47 miles from London, 8 from Basingstoke, 8 from Reading. — (For access, see above.) — Money orders issued at Basingstoke: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. — Strat is the word from which our present term straight is derived. The parish forms part of such a flat piece of country, bounded by uplands. The addition of Saye seems to have been derived from a family of that name, who originally possessed the domain. From them it passed by marriage to the Dabridgecourts, who held it from the time of Richard II. till 1636, when it was purchased by Sir William Pitt, an ancestor of the great Earl of Chatham, to whom it descended. It is now the chief country seat of Field-Marshal His Grace the Duke of Wellington. Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—About the year of our Lord 1170, Nicholas de Stoteville founded the abbey of Vallement, or de Valido Monte, in Normandy, to which, among many other endowments, he gave the church of Stratfield, and a solitary place near it, dedicated to St. Leonard, wherein were fixed a prior and some Benedictine monks of that foreign house, to look after their estates here in England. Upon the suppression of the alien priories, this was granted to Eton college, in the first year of Edward IV. — The living (the Virgin Mary), a rectory in the archd^r. and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £24. 13s.: pres. net income, £669: patron, Duke of Wellington: pres. incumbent, G. Wellesley, 1836: contains 3,860 acres: 105 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 839: ass^d. prop^r. £5,782: poor rates in 1848, £463. Tithes commuted in 1839. — The chief feature of the parish is, of course, the noble mansion of his Grace, presented to him by the country as one portion of its appreciation of his splendid military services. The park of Stratfield-Saye, though not large, extending about a mile in breadth, and a mile and a half in length, is exceedingly pleasing, from its variety of wood and water, the river Loddon winding through the grounds, and here and there expanding into ornamental lakes, while, on the eastern side, hill and dale, with their undulations, richly timbered, offer other attractions. To attempt even the briefest epitome of his Grace's, or rather, as he ought to be termed, the Field-Marshal's career, would almost seem to be an impertinence, but, in conformity with the plan of this work, it is a pleasurable necessity. His Grace was born at Dangane Castle, in the county of Meath, in Ireland; is the third son of Garrett, Earl of Mornington; born in 1769, and married, in 1806, Catherine, third daughter of Edward Michael, Lord Longford. He entered the army early, and was alternately connected with cavalry and infantry regiments, ultimately becoming, before attaining the rank of general, colonel of the 33d foot; with them his Grace continued some time, but assumed the command of a brigade in 1794, during the Duke of York's campaign in Holland. Shortly afterwards he went to India, where, as colonel, he did service that would distinguish any man. He was engaged in all the military operations of the period, commanding the onslaught at the siege of Seringapatam, and, by the splendour of his military achievements at the battle of Assaye and elsewhere, won a repute which ultimately made him the commander-in-chief of the British army, and generalissimo of all the forces in Europe. His Grace, in 1808, entered upon the field of his enduring, though not of his crowning triumphs, for then he was, when Sir Arthur Wellesley, appointed general of the forces of the troops engaged in the Spanish peninsular war. He persevered through a period of six years in the struggle with the best troops, and the best generals of Napoleon; and, as is well known, in the end drove them out of Portugal and Spain, and at length, after many arduous contests, invaded France, finishing that war by defeating Marshal Soult at the battle of Toulouse. But the crowning glory was yet to come. Napoleon broke his oath, left Elba, and again attained the throne of France. The powers of Europe were aroused; and the short but decisive campaign followed, which was crowned by the battle of Waterloo. This was the climax of his Grace's military services in the field. His Grace was at the peace called the generalissimo of the armies of Europe, and all Europe felt satisfied that they had such a spirit at their head. But his Grace, like the Duke of Marlborough, was not only a general but a statesman; has filled the highest offices of the state; has been prime minister, foreign secretary, ambassador, plenipotentiary, and for some time most patriotically directed all the departments of the state during an interval in which a regular ministry could not be formed. His Grace exhibits the only example of an individual being called to the bar of the House of Lords, and having the patents of all his titles read over, from that of baron to that of the highest rank of peerage in the realm. His Grace, after having been knighted, was created Baron Douro of Wellesley, in the county of Somerset, Viscount Wellington of Talavera and Wellington, in the same county, in 1809, Earl of Wellington in 1812, Marquis of Wellington in the same year, and Marquis of Douro and Duke of Wellington in 1814. His Grace is also Duke of Ciudad Rodrigo, and a grandee of the first class in Spain, Duke of Vittoria, Marquis of Torres Vedras, and Count of Vimiera in Portugal, and, most of all, Prince of Waterloo. His Grace is commander-in-chief of the army, warden of the Cinque Ports, colonel of the Grenadier Guards, colonel-in-chief of the Rifle Brigade, knight of the Garter, a knight grand cross of the Bath, and knight also of most of the illustrious foreign orders. His Grace is also constable of the Tower, commissioner of Chelsea Hospital, lord-lieutenant of Hampshire, and chancellor of the University of Oxford—honours superior to those awarded any man that ever lived before—but well earned.

STRATFORD-TURGIS, HANTS, a parish in the hundred of Holdshot, union of Basingstoke, Basingstoke division of the county: 48 miles from London, 7 from Basingstoke, 10 from Aldermaston. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) The charities produce about £2. 10s. per annum. The living (All Saints), a rectory in the archdiocese and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £6. 10s. 2½d.: pres. net income, £204: patron, Duke of Wellington: pres. incumbent, J. Bastard, 1812: contains 900 acres: 46 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 243: ass^d. prop^y £1,267: poor rates in 1848, £123. 1s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

Money orders issued at Colchester: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. One of the schools here is endowed with £7 per annum. The other charities produce about £18 per annum. The living, a disch^d. rectory in the archdiocese of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £13: pres. net income, £296: patron, Duchy of Lancaster: pres. incumbent, H. Golding, 1844: contains 1,440 acres: 91 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 647: ass^d. prop^y £2,650: poor rates in 1848, £295. 12s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

STRATFORD-UPON-AVON, WARWICK, a parish, borough, and market town, in Stratford division of the hundred of Barlichway, union of Stratford-upon-Avon: 108 miles from London (coach road 96), 9 from Warwick, 11 from Shipston-on-Stour. Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford, Stow, and Moreton-le-Marsh, to Stratford station: from

Derby, through Birmingham, Worcester, and Moreton-le-Marsh, to Stratford, 141 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters delivered 7½ a.m. and 3.40 p.m.: post closes 7 a.m. and 6 p.m. The town is beautifully situated on an elevation rising from the river Avon, which here spreads into a broad channel, crossed by a handsome bridge of fourteen arches, which constitutes the main entrance from London, and which was erected in the reign of Henry VII. by Sir Hugh Clopton. At the east end of this bridge is the hamlet of Bridgetown, and almost parallel with it there is another bridge of nine arches, built of brick, and exclusively used to carry the Moreton railway to the several wharves on the west bank of the river. Still further on, there is another called the Mill-bridge. Stratford consists principally of about a dozen chief streets, from which other minor ones and courts diverge, and, like most other old towns, is built upon no regular plan, but is embellished by many good houses. The church, which stands on the margin of the river, is a spacious and venerable structure, with a square embattled tower, surrounded by lofty and ancient elms, and approached through a long avenue of lime-trees. It contains many pleasing monuments, but one is of surpassing interest—that of Shakespeare, who, as is well known, was born and died here. His body was laid on the north side of the church, under a gravestone, on which there is this inscription, said to have been prepared by himself, and which, if not written by him, comprised his own desire:—

"GOOD FRIEND, FOR JESUS' SAKE, FORBEARE TO DIG THE DYEST ENCLOSED HEARE; BLEST BE YE MAN YT SPARES THESE STONES, AND CYREST BE HE YT MOVES MY BONES."

There is also a monument to his memory, which is very ancient. It consists of a half-length effigy of the poet, between two columns of black marble, with gilded bases and capitals. The figure was formerly coloured to represent his appearance in life. "The eyes were of light hazel, and the hair and beard auburn; the dress consisted of a scarlet doublet, over which there was a loose black gown with sleeves. The lower part of a cushion before him was of a curious colour, and the upper part green, with gilt tassels." The likeness is supposed to have been approved of by his family, and is evidently the work of a man of science and skill. Near the grave are the resting-places of his wife and daughters. The chapel, formerly of the Guild of the Holy Cross, is a considerable ornament to the town, but parts of the original edifice were taken down, and portions of it rebuilt by Sir Hugh Clopton. The guild was a very ancient charitable foundation, the origin of which cannot now be ascertained; at the dissolution, there were four priests and a schoolmaster attached to it, with an income of something more than £30 a year. The school was a free grammar-school, founded in 1482 by Thomas Jolyffe, a native of Stratford, and one of the Guild of the Holy Cross. Though seized at the dissolution, the estate was restored by Henry VIII. to the corporation, and Edward VI. refounded the school, which is open to the sons of all the inhabitants of the town, for gratuitous instruction in the classics, reading, writing, and arithmetic; twelve scholars being upon the foundation. The guildhall adjoins the chapel of the Holy Cross; it is also an ancient structure, but has in the course of ages been much altered, the ground story being now used for corporate purposes, and for the grammar-school. The town-hall, which was erected in 1768, is a fine structure in the Tuscan style of architecture. It was dedicated to Shakespeare, and named after him by Mr. Garrick, during the great jubilee festival held here in honour of the poet in 1769. On the west front, a carved representation of the corporation arms has been placed, and at the north front there is a good statue of Shakespeare, with a scroll in his hand, presented by Garrick. The scroll is inscribed with the well-known lines beginning with—

"The poet's eye in a fine frenzy rolling;"

And on the pedestal underneath, are the words from his own play of Hamlet—

"—— Take him for all in all,
We shall not look upon his like again."

To speak of Shakespeare is to tell a thrice-told tale, and we need therefore simply chronicle him in the terms inscribed on his own monument. Beneath the effigies are the following lines:—

"JUDICIO PYLON, GENIO SOCRATES, ARTE MOSES, TERRA TRESIT, POPULUS MCGENT, OLYMPOS HABET."

"STAY, PASSENGER, STAY! WHY GOST THOU BY SO FAST?
READ, IF THOU CANST, WHOM ENVIOUS DEATH HATH FLAST
WITHIN THIS MONUMENT: SHAKESPEARE, WITH WHOM QUICK NATURE DIDE, WHOSE NAME DOTH DECK HIS TOWER, FAR MORE THAN COST SICH ALL Yt HE HATH WRITT, LEAVES LIVING ART BUT FAULT TO SERVE HIS WRIT."

"OBITU ANO. DOL. 1616. Æ. 53. DIE. 23 APR."

He was in all probability the most versatile genius that ever lived, and allowed to be the greatest poet, and the individual, not directly inspired by Divine influence, best acquainted with humanity, and most able to portray its characteristics. The house in which he was born is situated in Henley Street, and occupied by the descendants of his sister Jane, until the year 1806. It is now divided into two tenements, one being used as a butcher's shop, and the other as a tavern, or rather public-house; but as it originally stood, must have been a highly respectable homestead for a trader of the sixteenth century. After his career of trial, vicissitude, courtly notice, and fortune, Shakespeare returned to his native place, and bought what was called "the Great House," the best house in the town—an appellation which, with his consummate knowledge of human nature and excellent judgment, he changed to that of "the New Place." There he lived till his death, and from there he was buried. It must have been a house of some consideration, for Henrietta, the queen of Charles I., held a court there, during the stay of Prince Rupert, and made it her temporary residence. The property ultimately fell into the hands of the Rev. Mr. Gastell, by whom Shakespeare's mulberry-tree was cut down, and the house likewise destroyed. —The parochial charities are too many to be mentioned, but it may be observed that the endowment of the grammar-school has risen to £700 a year, part of which is applied to the support of twenty-two almshouses. Under the municipal corporation act, the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors, under the usual corporate style, their income amounting to about £1,800 a year. This is one of the polling-places for the southern division of the county. The Stratford poor-law union comprehends thirty-six parishes, with a population of about 19,000 inhabitants, spread over an area of 115 square miles. The living (the Holy Trinity), a disch^d vicarage, a peculiar in the diocese of Worcester, is valued at £20: pres. net income, £239: patron, Countess Amherst: pres. incumbent, Henry Harding, 1848: contains 673 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 6,022: ass^d prop^r £4,836. Market day, Friday. Fairs: first Monday in January, last in March and April, third in July, Friday after Dec. 11, May 14, September 25, October 12, and second Friday after hiring. STRATFORD-UNDER-THÉ-CASTLE, WILTS, a parish in the hun^d of Underditch, union of Alderbury, on the eastern bank of the Avon: 98 miles from London (coach road 83), 2 from Salisbury, 3 from Wilton. Sou. West. Rail. to Salisbury, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Salisbury, &c., 191 miles. Money orders issued at Salisbury: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 9 p.m. The celebrated borough of Old Sarum—which see—is in this parish; and, under a tree near the church, the members were formerly nominated, or rather appointed. The living (St. Lawrence) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Sarum: pres. net income, £80: patrons, Dean and Chapter of Salisbury: pres. incumbent, Charles King, 1849: contains 1,350 acres: 83 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 352: ass^d prop^r £2,803: poor rates in 1848, £512. 19s.

STRATFORD (FENNY), BUCKINGHAM, a chapelry and market town, partly in the parish of Bletchley—which see for access, &c.—and partly in that of Simpson, hund^d of Newport, union of Newport-Pagnell: 44 miles from London, 8 from Stony-Stratford, 7 from Newport-Pagnell. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 12 noon: post closes 9½ p.m. and 9 p.m. The town—situated upon an elevation, watered by the river Lofield—takes its name from the nature of the surrounding soil. It consists principally of two streets, one stretching along the course of the high road, and the other forming part of the cross road to Aylesbury. The principal business of the inhabitants, who are operatives, consists in the making of blonde lace; the Railway and the Grand Junction Canal affording considerable facilities for the trade. The living (St. Martin) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Oxford: patron, J. Willis, Esq.: pres. incumbent, John Steward, 1847: contains 930 acres: 116 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,033: ass^d prop^r £2,291: poor rates in 1848, £123. 1s. Market day, Monday. Fairs: April 19, July 18, Oct. 10, Nov. 28. Inns: Swan and Saracen's Head.

STRATFORD-LANGTHORNE, ESSEX, a populous chapelry and village on the banks of the Lea, in the parish of West Ham—which see for access,

&c.): 3 miles from London, 5 from Woolwich, 9 from Romford. A church has recently been erected here by the Ecclesiastical Commissioners, and is a very handsome edifice, in the architectural style of the thirteenth century. There was formerly a considerable abbey here of the Cistercian order, founded in 1115 by William of Montfitchet, the revenues of which, at the dissolution, amounted to £573. 15s. 6d. per annum. The village has been greatly improved of late years: and the Independents, Methodists, and Roman Catholics, now have chapels in it; while many flour mills have sprung up, and extensive chemical works, printworks, distilleries, and other manufactories, have been established in the neighbourhood. (Popⁿ with the pari-h.)

STRATFORD (OLD), NORTHAMPTON, a hamlet in the parishes of Cosgrove, Fortho, Passenham, and Potterspury—which see for access, &c.): 53 miles from London, 1 from Stony-Stratford, 7 from Buckingham. (Popⁿ returned with the different parishes.)

STRATFORD (OLD). See STRATFORD-UPON-AVON.

STRATFORD (STONY), BUCKINGHAM, a market town, comprising the united parishes of Westside and Eastside, in the hund^d of Newport, union of Potterspury, intersected by the Grand Junction Canal: 54 miles from London (coach road 52), 8 from Buckingham, 8 from Fenny-Stratford. Nor. West. Rail. to Wolverton station, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through Rugby to Wolverton, 81 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 12½ p.m.: post closes 9.35 a.m. and 8½ p.m. The town is situated upon the banks of the river Ouse, over which there is a stone bridge that forms the communication with Old Stratford, in the neighbouring county of Northampton, and on the Roman road called Watling Street. The houses, which are mostly built of freestone, extend about a mile on each side of the highway, which here is partially paved; but, during the last century, the town was twice almost entirely destroyed by fire. The inhabitants not occupied by agricultural pursuits, are chiefly engaged in the making of lace. The market-house is a neat edifice. The Independents, Baptists, and Methodists, all have chapels here. One of the schools here is endowed with £28 per annum. The other charities produce upwards of £550 a year, part of which is applied to parochial purposes, and part to the apprenticing of poor children. The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Oxford: pres. net income, £130: patron, Bishop of Lincoln: pres. incumbent, T. Bleaymire, 1849: contains 70 acres: 329 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,757: ass^d prop^r £2,088: poor rates in 1848, £569. 16s. Tithes of the parish of Westside commuted in 1782. Market day, Friday. Fairs: August 2, Friday after October 11, and first Friday in November. Marsham, Esq., who resides in a remarkably fine mansion, built within these forty years, and surrounded by noble trees, especially cedars, planted by his ancestor, near the Norwich road. The manor has been held by this family since the time of Edward I.; and the church contains many monuments of its members. This ancient family derives its surname from the town of Marsham, where they formerly had their seat, and was held in high estimation as far back as the reign of Henry I., but, of course, no regular record of the family could be preserved until the reign of Edward I., when genealogical history came into being. From John de Marsham, Esq., the present representative of the family is a direct descendant. Mr. Marsham was a member for the county for several years from 1826, and is now a deputy-lieutenant of the county.

The church having been struck with lightning, a new one was built, in the erection of which nearly £8,000 has been expended; the total number of sittings are 1,200, most of which are devoted to the poor—£5,000 of this amount was paid by the ecclesiastical commissioners. In this parish, in addition to other voluntary establishments, are St. Ann's schools, the principal of which are sustained by voluntary contributions, aided by many endowments, amounting to about £473 per annum. Besides this, a daily school was founded by Mrs. Howland, the endowment of which amounts to £20 per annum; the other charities produce about £170 per annum. The village, which is on the old Brighton road, may be regarded as a suburb of the metropolis, and is now filled with the residences of the gentry. The houses are consequently highly ornamental, as also are the grounds. To enumerate the residents would be a superfluity, for their name is legion. In the vicinity there is a mineral spring; and this was the place of retreat for Dr. Johnson during his periods of listlessness and melancholy. Dr. Hoadley was rector of this parish previous to his elevation to the Episcopal bench. The neighbourhood is varied by hills and dales, and is one of the most pleasing parts of England.—The living is valued at £18. 13s. 9d.: contains 2,770 acres: 741 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 5,994: ass^d. prop^r. £25,277: poor rates in 1848, £2,333.

The climate is particularly salubrious, and there are several admirable trout streams in the neighbourhood. On the summit of Caer Caradoc there is an ancient encampment, defended by several steep ascents, and strengthened in some places by two or three intrenchments. There is no question but that it was at one time a station occupied by the British chief, Caractacus, and is believed to be the spot on which he fought his last battle. The church is a handsome cruciform structure. The free school is partly supported by endowment; other parochial charities produce about £40 per annum. The Church-Stretton poor-law union comprises fourteen parishes, with a population of about 6,000 persons, spread over an area of 51 square miles. — The living (St. Lawrence), a rectory in the archd^y. of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, is valued at £15. 10s.: pres. net income, £542: patron, C. The second of these, though only an open roadstead, affords excellent anchoring ground for vessels drawing not more than 14 or 15 feet of water. On Studland Common there are a number of curious barrows, of which the most remarkable is that called Adlingestone, or Agglestone, an insulated rock about 80 feet high, which is supposed to have been a Druidical altar. The island of Brownsea, in the oval form, lies about three miles north of Studham; the castle at its extremity was built in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, by the inhabitants of Poole, for their defence. —The living, a rectory in the diocese of Sarum, is valued at £7. 10s. 5d.: pres. net income, £175: patron, Mrs. Michel: pres. incumbent, C. M. Turner, 1838: contains 3,860 acres: 88 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 453: ass^d prop^r £712: poor rates in 1848, £199. Tithes commuted in 1839. —The Manor-house is the principal country seat of George Bankes, Esq., who derives his descent from Sir John Bankes, an eminent judge, who, after a distinguished legal career, became attorney-general, and was made chief-justice of the Court of Common Pleas, in the reign of Charles I., and through the time that he lived after the commencement of the civil war, adhered with unshaken fidelity to the royal cause, attaching himself in personal service to the king, whom he followed to York, and afterwards to Oxford, where he died. While absent, his seat of Corfe-Castle was attacked by the parliamentarians, but it was gallantly defended by his lady, and only surrendered, after sustaining three sieges, when it was taken by treachery. All his descendants, down to the present representative, held distinguished positions, and sat in parliament. Geo. Bankes, Esq., is

It contains many handsome houses, and is well supplied with water. In 1838, a new church was built in the early English style, which is capable of accommodating upwards of 1,000 persons; and at Whiteshill, a handsome district church has also been erected in a situation of very great beauty; the summit of which commands delightful prospects of the lovely valleys which everywhere wind round the country. The structure, which is capable of accommodating 600 persons; is in the Norman style of architecture. The parochial charities produce about £570 per annum, of which something more than £100 is applied to educational purposes. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. Stroud is recognised as the chief place in the west of England for the manufacture of woollen cloths; the waters of the Frome, it is said, possessing peculiar properties for fixing and preserving the dyes of scarlets and other grain colours; and the banks of the river are consequently covered with dyeing, fulling, and other similar establishments. The petty sessions for the hun^d are held here on the first and third Fridays of every month. The Reform Act has conferred the privilege of returning two members to parliament on this town, in conjunction with the several parishes of Stroud, Bisley, Painswick, Pitchcomb, Randwick, Stonehouse, Leonard-Stanley, King's-Stanley, Rodborough, Minchinhampton, Woodchester, Avening, and Horsley, except that part of the parish of Leonard-Stanley which is called Lorridge's Farm, and is surrounded by the parish of Berkeley. Stroud is a polling-place in the election of the members for the eastern division of the county. The poor-law union comprises 15 parishes, with a population of about 12,000 persons, spread over an area of about 63 square miles. — The living (St. Lawrence), a perpetual curacy, with that of Trinity annexed, in the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol, is valued at £17. 5s.: pres. net income, £132: patron, Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol: pres. incumbent, G. Here the ancestors of the present noble family of Vernon have been deposited after death for upwards of two centuries, and various monuments have been erected to their memory. One, a neat mural tablet, bears a very pleasing inscription from the poet-laureate Whitehead, in remembrance of Catherine, daughter to the late Lord Vernon, who died at the age of twenty-five. It is as follows, and contains many pleasing, yet sedative thoughts:—

"Mild as the opening morn's serenest ray,
Mild as the close of summer's softest day,
Her form, her virtues (formed alike to please,
With artless charms and unassuming ease),
On every breast their mingling influence stole,
And in sweet union breathed one beauteous whole.
This fair example to the world was lent,
As the short lesson of a life well spent.
Alas, too short! but bounteous Heaven knows
When to reclaim the blessings it bestows."

Whitehead deserved his laureateship, if all he did was as good as this. In the time of Edward II., the manor of Sudbury belonged to the Montgomery family, who held it till the reign of Henry VIII., when the youngest daughter and co-heiress of Sir John Montgomery conveyed it by marriage to Sir John Vernon, son of Sir Henry Vernon of Haddon Hall, whose descendant, the present Lord Vernon, is the proprietor. The mansion, a fine structure in the Elizabethan style, was erected at the beginning of the seventeenth century by Mary, widow of John Vernon, Esq. Most of the apartments are fitted up, as might be expected, in an elegant manner, and many of them are enriched with fine paintings. A good gallery runs through the house, and in it there are portraits of Lords Cromwell and Strafford, and Sir John Vernon, all three favourites of Charles I. The mansion was, from 1840 to 1843, the principal residence of the late Queen Dowager Adelaide. The park is extensive, stocked with more than a thousand deer, and beautifully timbered. The family of the Vernons is of great antiquity, being descended from the Lords of Vernon in Normandy, one of whom, Richard de Vernon, accompanied William the Conqueror to England, and was one of the seven barons created by Hugh Lupus, the great Earl of Chester. Sir Ralph de Vernon, who was alive in the reign of Edward II., was called the "Long Liver," from his great age, which is said to have been 150 years; but the first of the family raised to the peerage was the late George Venables Vernon, who was, in 1762, created Baron Vernon of Kinderton, in the county of Chester. From that nobleman, the present peer, who succeeded in 1835, as fifth baron, is a lineal descendant. The living (All Saints), a rectory in the archd^y of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £14. 13s. 1½d.: pres. net income, £747: patron, Lord Vernon: pres. incumbent, F. Anson, Jun., 1836: contains 3,500 acres: popⁿ in 1841, 599: poor rates in 1848, £120. 12s.

SUDBURY, SUFFOLK, a borough and market town in the hun^d of Babergh, union of Sudbury, on the river Stour: 58 miles from London (coach road 54), 11 from Hadleigh, 16 from Bury St. Edmund's. East. Co^t. Rail. through Mark's-Tey to Sudbury station: from Derby, through London, &c., 190 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. This place, originally called Sudburgh, is one of very high antiquity, and was at one time considered to be the capital of the county: it was incorporated as early as 1539, when it first returned members to parliament. The town, which is neat and well built, lighted, paved, and watched under a local act, is situated to the southern extremity of what now constitutes the borough. Sudbury comprises the parishes of All Saints, St. Gregory, and St. Peter, in the archd^y of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich. The living of All Saints is a vicarage, rated at £4. 11s. 5½d.; gross income, £123: patron in 1841, J. Sperling, Esq. The living of St. Gregory is a perpetual curacy, with that of St. Peter annexed; gross income, £160: patron in 1841, Sir L. Maclean. The churches are spacious and handsome structures. The college of St. Gregory, for six secular priests, of whom one was to be warden or master, was founded in 1374, by Simon de Sudbury, then bishop of London. At the suppression by Henry VIII., it was valued at £122 per annum. A part of this house is still standing. A priory of Benedictine monks, cell to the abbey of Westminster, was founded here by Wulfric, in the time of Henry I. This edifice, of which Kirkby has given a print, was pulled down in 1779. The house of Black friars was established in the reign of Edward I., through the favour of Baldwin de Shipling or Simperling, the reputed founder. The last remains of this priory were pulled down in 1821. The town-hall is a handsome structure, and attached to it is the borough jail. Formerly a considerable business was done here in the making of woollen cloths, but now the principal trade arises from the weaving of bunting for ships' flags, and the manufacture of silk. A very considerable amount of business, however, is also done in the exportation of agricultural produce, and the importation of coal and manufactured articles for the town and the neighbouring rural districts, by means of the river, which is navigable for barges within a short distance of the town. The grammar-school here is endowed with lands to about £100 per annum. St. Leonard's hospital, founded in 1372, for infirm or leprosy persons, has been turned over to the guardians of the poor. The other charities produce about £80 per annum; all the public eleemosynary funds being placed under the guardianship of fifteen trustees. Under the municipal act, the borough comprises the three parishes, with some extra-parochial lands, and the hamlet of Bellingdon-cum-Brunden, and is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors, under the usual corporate style. Contains 1,250 acres: 971 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 5,085: do. in 1851, 5,848: ass^d. prop^r. £3,471: poor rates in 1848, £1,686. 17s. Market day, Saturday. Fairs: March 12, July 10, and September 4. SULHAM, BERKS, a parish in the hun^d of Theale, union of Bradfield, watered by a branch of the Thames: 40 miles from London (coach road 44), 5 from Reading, 2 from Theale. — Gt. West. Rail. to Reading, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Rugby and Oxford to Reading, &c., 127 miles. — Money orders issued at Reading: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. — The principal object of interest in the village is the church, dedicated to St. Nicholas, which was rebuilt, almost entirely through the munificence of the present rector, in 1838. It is a stone and flint building, with a handsome tower surmounted by a spire. The east window is partly filled with stained glass, and the church contains several interesting monuments to the Wilder family. The churchyard is tastefully planted with shrubs and evergreens, ascribable, most probably, to the refined and correct taste of the rector, who resides at Sulham House, an imposing residence, surrounded by most pleasing pleasure-grounds, and commanding fine views of woodland scenery. — The living, a rectory in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £6. 4s.: pres. net income, £127: patron, F. Wilder, Esq.: pres. incumbent, John Wilder, 1836: contains 730 acres: 19 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 124: ass^d prop^r £1,159: poor rates in 1848, £47. 4s.

tory, with that of Sulhamstead-Bannister, in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £10. 6s. 3d.: pres. net income, £600: patron, Queen's College, Oxford: pres. incumbent, R. Coulthard, 1845: contains 3,040 acres: 80 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 425: ass^d prop^r £3,052: poor rates in 1848, £222. 16s.

SULHAMSTEAD-BANNISTER, BERKS, a parish in the hun^d of Theale, union of Bradfield, watered by the Kennet: 45 miles from London, 11 from Newbury, 11 from Basingstoke. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) There is a Methodist chapel in the village. The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Sulhamstead-Abbots: contains 630 acres: 51 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 302: ass^d prop^r £1,943: poor rates in 1848, £61. 8s. Mrs. Thoyts of Sulhamstead House, and Robert Morgan, Esq. of Oakfield Lodge, have handsome residences here.

SULLINGTON, SUSSEX, a parish in the hun^d of East Easwirth, union of Thakeham, rape of Bramber: 69 miles from London (coach road 48), 6 from Steyning, 8 from Worthing. Brighton and Sou. Coast Rail. to Worthing, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 201 miles. Money orders issued at Steyning: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. The living (the Virgin Mary), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £12. 17s. 6d.: pres. net income, £296: patron, Rev. G. Palmer: pres. incumbent, George Palmer, 1824: contains 1,660 acres: 42 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 242: ass^d prop^r £1,542: poor rates in 1848, £339. 19s. Tithes commuted in 1840. Sullington-Sandgate Lodge is the residence of John George Gibson, Esq., whose family was seated, during the reign of James IV., in the county of Fife, and for many generations held large possessions in that shire, together with estates in the neighbourhood of Glasgow. Of that family the present Mr. Gibson, who is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Sussex, is the representative.

SULLY, GLAMORGAN, a hamlet and parish in the hun^d of Dinas-Powis, union of Cardiff: 175 miles from London (coach road 166), 6 from Cardiff, 12 from Cowbridge. Gt. West. SUNBURY, MIDDLESEX, a parish in the hun^d of Spelthorne, union of Staines: 19 miles from London (coach road 16), 5 from Kingston, 4 from Chertsey. Sou. West. Rail. to Esher station, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 151 miles. London letters deliv^d twice each way daily. Its agreeable distance from the metropolis, and its vicinity to Bushy Park and Hampton Court, combined with its beautiful views over the Thames and the surrounding country, have rendered this one of the most pleasing resorts in the neighbourhood of London for the refined classes. The gentry are therefore numerous, and many of the residences are not only imposing, but of very pleasing appearance. The living (the Virgin Mary), a vicarage in the archd^y of Middlesex, and diocese of London, is valued at £13. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £336: patron, Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's: pres. incumbent, H. Vigne, 1842: contains 2,400 acres: 341 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,828: do. in 1851, 2,102: ass^d prop^r £11,038: poor rates in 1848, £1,116. 4s. Tithes commuted in 1799-1800.

SUNDERLAND, CUMBERLAND, a township in the parish of Isall—(which see for access, &c.): 301 miles from London, 5 from Cockermouth, 10 from Keswick. Money orders issued at Cockermouth: London letters deliv^d 1 p.m.: post closes at noon. Contains 15 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 81: ass^d prop^r £624: poor rates in 1848, £22. 10s.

SUNDERLAND, DURHAM, a borough, seaport, and market town, in the north division of Easington ward, union of Sunderland: 293 miles from London (coach road 268), 12 from Newcastle-on-Tyne, 8 from South Shields. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, York, and Durham, to Sunderland station: from Derby, through York, &c., 171 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 and 10 a.m.: post closes 3.25 and 8.25 p.m. It is a somewhat singular circumstance that Sunderland is not mentioned by either Camden or Leland, although the appellation given to the town was borne by it long before their time; and there can be no doubt of its identification, for there has been no change of its site, on the south side of the Wear, from its foundation. Its early history, however, appears to have been somewhat mixed up with that of Bishopwearmouth, in which it was included until 1719, when it was made a separate parish, by act of parliament, on a petition of the inhabitants. The name of the place has often puzzled the antiquarians; but the fact seems to be, that it has, like most other places of early origin, derived its designation from its topographical situation. It was originally built in a position made peninsular by the influx of the Wear into the sea, and a deep ravine, called Hendon Dean, by which it was separated, or "sundered," from the main land—and, therefore, hence the name "Sunderland."

So early as the reign of Henry VIII., Sunderland became a place of considerable importance from its coal trade—that first of elements which, in England, led to the power exercised by town over country life; in other words, the prompter of civilization and refinement. Early in the 17th century, several Scottish families, and several foreign merchants, came to reside here, and the town, consequently, grew in magnitude and wealth; Bishop Morton granting a charter of incorporation. During the great civil war, the town was devoted to the interests of the parliament, and was garrisoned for them until its surrender to the royalists. The Duke of Marlborough derives his second title of Earl from this place. In consequence of the act just noticed, Sunderland and Bishop-Wearmouth are become two distinct parishes, but they, in fact, constitute one town, though of different appellations, and also of somewhat different characteristics. Of Bishop-Wearmouth we have already spoken in its proper place. Sunderland proper consists of one main street, nearly a mile in length, lined by handsome residences and shops, in which every article of luxury or necessity can be procured in metropolitan style. From this, several other streets diverge on either side, not, perhaps, of similar pretensions, but more adapted for private residence, and with all the necessaries for domestic comfort. Outlying these are numerous lanes and alleys, trending to the river, in which the lower classes of the inhabitants live. The markets are excellent, and all the streets well paved, and brilliantly lighted with gas; a splendid market has superseded the other subterfuges, so that the inhabitants of Sunderland can obtain all they desire at one place. In such a town the accommodation for the spiritual wants of the inhabitants are numerous and various. The living of Holy Trinity, Sunderland, is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of St. John, in the archd^y and diocese of Durham (not in charge), returned at £89: gross income of the former, £264: of the latter, £122: patron, the Bishop of Durham. The church, which was erected in 1719, and repaired in 1803, is a handsome brick edifice, with a square tower. St. John's chapel was built in 1769 by subscription; the site, at the head of Barrack Street, having been given by Marshall Robinson, Esq., of Herrington. The living of Bishop-Wearmouth is a rectory, with the curacy of St. John, in the archd^y and diocese of Durham, rated at £89. 18s. 1½d.: gross income, £3,346: net income, £2,899: patron, the Bishop of Durham. Ryhope chapel is a perpetual curacy, of the annual value of £100, in the patronage of the Rev. and Hon. G. V. Wellesley. The chapel of St. Thomas is also a perpetual curacy. The dissenting places of worship are numerous. Independent churches were formed in 1815 and 1817; a Baptist church, in 1797; two Presbyterian churches, in 1762 and 1830; a Wesleyan Methodist church, and one of the New Connexion, in 1809: and a Primitive Methodist, in 1810. Here are also places of worship for Independent and Calvinistic Methodists, United Secession, Society of Friends, Roman Catholics, Unitarians, and Jews. Mrs. Dennison's school, containing twenty-two females, is supported by an endowment producing an annual income of £120. 7s. 10d. A day and

Sunday national school is endowed with £37. 10s. per annum. A daily school, at Bishop-Wearmouth, containing one hundred males, is endowed by the rector, and otherwise supported by small weekly payments from the children. The infirmary, comprising a dispensary, house of recovery, and humane society, was erected, in 1822, at a cost of £3,000. Almshouses in Church-lane, Bishop-Wearmouth, for twelve poor persons, were founded and endowed, in 1725, by Mrs. Jane Gibson: income about £132. On Wearmouth-green, almshouses were founded about 1712, for twelve poor persons, by the Rev. John Bowes, and endowed, in 1725, by Dr. Thomas Ogle, with £100. The Sunderland and Bishop-Wearmouth Marine almshouse, for ten widows or unmarried daughters of master-mariners, was founded and endowed, in 1820, by Mrs. Elizabeth Woodcock; each inmate, who must have passed her 56th year, receives an annuity of £10 for life. There are also almshouses for thirty-eight superannuated sailors or their widows, who are supported by sixpence per month, levied by act of parliament from every sailor employed in the port. Other charities yield about £20 per annum. The chief status of Sunderland is owing to its geographical position on the coast, at the mouth of a navigable river, flowing through districts remarkably rich in coal and lime, as well as other minerals. During late years, the harbour, which was formerly too open to be safe for small craft, has been greatly improved, under the authority of different acts of parliament, being formed by piers on the north and south side of the river. The south pier is 630 yards in length, and has a tide-light at its extremity. The north pier is 1,850 feet in length, and has an elegant lighthouse, built of stone, at its termination; its form is octagonal, and it is 62 feet in elevation from high water. But one of the noblest ornaments of Sunderland is its magnificent bridge over the Wear, erected at an expense of £26,000, and which was opened in 1796. It consists of iron, and is one vast expanse of 236 feet, elevated 100 feet above the stream, so that vessels of large burthen can pass under it with the trifling inconvenience—which seldom occurs—of lowering their top-gallant masts. Sunderland was enfranchised by the Reform Act, and now returns two members to parliament. Under the Municipal Act, the borough, which has received several royal charters, is divided into seven wards, governed by fourteen aldermen and forty-two common councillors, under the usual corporate style. Petty sessions are held here, in the Exchange, weekly. Sunderland is one of the largest shipbuilding establishments that we have, and ranks as the third port in the kingdom, being exceeded in its customs duties only by London, Liverpool, and Newcastle. — Present incumbent, Henry Peters, 1848: contains 5,995 acres: 7,575 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 17,022: ass^d. prop^y. £65,003: poor rates in 1848, £4,228. — Market day, Saturday. Fairs: May 13 and 14, and Oct. 11 and 12. — Bankers: Lambton & Co.—draw on Barclay, Bevana, & Co.; Sunderland Joint-Stock Banking Co.—draw on London and Westminster Bank; Branch of Northumberland and Durham District Bank—draw on Barclay, Bevana, & Co. — Inns: George, and

It belongs to the Crown, and was first granted on lease, in 1688, at a rent of £5 per annum, when it was described as containing 3,500 acres of "drowned land." This area, increasing every year in extent, was secured by an embankment, to which additional embankments were from time to time added, by which the original acres were increased in 1833 to 5,929, then divided into fifteen farms, in a high state of cultivation. The rents now amount to £9,140. 10s., and every year seems to be adding to its extent. In 1836, in consequence of representations made to the commissioners of Woods and Forests, by the tenants and others, of the great inconvenience they sustained from the want of a carriage road or other eligible communication between the island and the neighbouring towns on the borders of the Humber, an act was passed for making and maintaining a road from the church to the town of Ottringham, which has been completed at an expense of about £5,000. — The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of the east riding and diocese of York: pres. net income, £250: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, R. Rail. to Birmingham, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, &c., 48 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. — The town, which stands on an eminence, is of very considerable antiquity, having been a place of some note even in the time of the Saxons. Its distinctive appellation of "Coldfield," appears to have been derived from the bleak and uncheery aspect of a large tract of land, recently enclosed, which lies on the west side of the town. Most of the houses are well built, and the streets are exceedingly neat in appearance. The Moot-hall, which occupies a central position, and was renovated in 1807, is a substantial brick building, in which are held all the meetings of the townspeople, and those connected with the corporation business. The principal business of the inhabitants consists in the manufacture of agricultural implements, such as saws, spades, and other articles of a like kind. The church is a handsome Gothic structure, consisting of a chancel, nave, and side aisles, with a square tower. On Mere-green a chapel was erected in 1835. There are a Baptist and a Wesleyan Methodist chapel in the town. There are also a Roman Catholic college and a chapel here. Six of the schools here are endowed with funds yielding £1,744 per annum, vested in the corporation. The free grammar-school was founded by Bishop Vesey, in the reign of Henry VIII., and is endowed with lands, yielding on an average £500 a year, the advantages derived from which are palpably great. Almshouses have been erected here for ten poor persons, who are elected by the corporation as vacancies occur. Every inhabitant has the right of depasturing cattle in a common park, containing 2,100 acres, on the payment of a small sum annually. The other charities produce about £81 a year. Sutton-Coldfield was incorporated by Henry VIII., through the influence of Bishop Vesey, who was a native of this place; and the corporation, as lords of the manor, periodically hold courts leet and baron here. — The living (the Holy Trinity), a rectory in the diocese of Worcester, is valued at £33. 9s. 2d.: patron, R. Rail: through Ely and Lynn to Swaffham station: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, Ely, &c., 136 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. The town, which is very agreeably placed, has long been celebrated for the salubrity of its air, and the longevity of its inhabitants. It is placed on an eminence, and commands most delightful views of the surrounding country, and is regarded as one of the most pleasing places in the county. The streets, which diverge in various directions, form an excellent market place, are wide and well built, and are well furnished with good shops and admirable inns. An elegant cross was erected by the late Earl of Orford on the market hill; and, within these few years, a shire-hall and assembly-rooms have been added to the attractions of the place. The church is a fine edifice, having a nave, aisles, transepts, and a lofty tower, surmounted by rich embrasures and pinnacles. The Baptists and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels in the town. The free school is a large building, erected at the cost of £500, by Nicholas Hamond, Esq., who also left the interest of a similar sum for the education of twenty poor boys. Petty sessions are held here weekly, and adjourned quarter sessions generally in July. Swaffham is a polling-place, and the chief place of election for members for the western division of the county. The Poor-Law Commissioners have erected a workhouse here, which is capable of accommodating 400 persons. The Swaffham poor-law union comprises twenty-six parishes, with a population of about 13,000 persons, spread over an area of thirty-three square miles. A heath northwest of the town, several thousands of acres in extent, affords ample room for the sports of the turf and the field. The race-course, which is about three miles long, forms a half circle. The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a vicarage with the rectory of Threxton, in the archd^y of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £14. 5s. 10d.: pres. net income, £738: patron, Bishop of Norwich: pres. incumbent, S. It is a fine mansion, surrounded by a beautiful park, and remarkably pleasing pleasure-grounds. Sir Henry derives his descent from a Kentish family; and his father having filled the office of chief-justice of the supreme court of Bengal, was, for the services which he had rendered to the public, created a baronet. He married Anne Barbara, daughter of Sir Charles Whitworth of Leybourne, and sister of the late Earl Whitworth, by whom he had Sir Henry, the present baronet, who succeeded to the title and estates in 1836.

SWALLOWELL, DURHAM, a township in the parish of Wickham—(which see for access, &c.): 272 miles from London, 4 from Gateshead, 14 from Durham. — There are some extensive iron-works here, established by Sir Ambrose Crawley in 1790. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in the village. — Contains 193 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,611: do. in 1851, 1,853. — (Other returns with the parish.)

SWANAGE (or SWANWICH), DORSET, a parish and market town in the hun^d. of Rowbarrow, union of Wareham and Purbeck, Blandford (South) division of the county: 134 miles from London (coach road 115), 11 from Wareham, 6 from Corfe-Castle. — Sou. West. Rail. through Southampton to Wareham, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Wareham, &c., 223 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. The town, which consists principally of one street nearly a mile in length, is situated on the small bay of Swanage. The houses are chiefly of stone, and within the last few years, a very excellent hotel has been built for the accommodation of the visitors who flock here during the summer season for sea-bathing. There are also numerous lodging houses; the place is well supplied with all kinds of provisions and fruit, and altogether it is a place of very agreeable sojourn. The bay affords good anchorage for vessels of from 300 to 400 tons burthen. The inhabitants of Swanage are chiefly employed in the quarrying of freestone, of which large quantities are exported from the neighbourhood. The living (Virgin Mary), a rectory in the diocese of Sarum, is valued at £27. 9s. 9d.: pres. net income, £545: patron, Rev. J. L. Jackson: pres. incumbent, J. L. Money orders issued at Dartford: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. An unendowed almshouse is inhabited by three poor persons, rent free; the other charities produce a variable income, which is applied to parochial purposes. The living, a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Rochester, is valued at £25. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £612: patron, Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge: pres. incumbent, G. C. Renouard, 1818: contains 3,460 acres: 190 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,703: do. in 1851, 2,028: ass^d prop^r £3,564: poor rates in 1848, £202. 4s.

SWANSEA (or ABER-TAWCY), GLAMORGAN, a parish, borough, and seaport town, in the hun^d and union of Swansea, South Wales, on the western bank of the river Tawey: 206 miles from London, 24 from Carmarthen, 25 from Bridgend. Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse, Gloucester, and Chepstow to Swansea, 214 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 3¾ p.m. This, one of the most pleasing places in the country, is situated on a fine bay of semicircular form. The streets are well built and brilliantly lighted with gas, being generally broad and well paved. The town-hall is an elegant modern edifice, erected within the enclosure, at a cost of more than £6,600. There was formerly a formidable castle here, but the only portion remaining entire is a massive quadrangular tower, surmounted by a parapet, pierced by light circular arches. The situation is particularly fine, and commands many noble prospects. There is a theatre here, built within the last few years, and all the other appliances required by a refined and affluent community. From the success of improvements, the harbour of this place is not only the most beautiful, but one of the most secure in the kingdom. Two admirable piers, on the east and west sides, confine the channel of the river, which has been so deepened that vessels of 300 tons burthen can ride safely in it. On the western pier there are a lighthouse and a watch-house, with a fine terrace, which commands a most delightful view of the bay, the town, and the surrounding country. The living of the parish is a vicarage in the archd^y of Carmarthen, and diocese of St. David's, valued at £7. 14s. 4½d: gross income, £302: patron, in 1841, Sir J. Morris, Bart. The chapel of St. John's, at the upper end of the town, originally belonging to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, is a perpetual curacy—(see JOHN, Sr.) The chapel of St. Thomas, which was situated in the parish of St. Mary, has been wholly washed away by the sea. Dissenting churches here are numerous, comprising two Baptist, two Wesleyan Methodist, an Independent, a Presbyterian, a Huntingdonian, a Calvinistic Methodist, and a Roman Catholic chapel. There are also daily and Sunday schools; one of the former conducted on the Lancasterian plan, contains 241 boys; another 140; and a third 150 girls. The free grammar-school was founded, in 1682, by Hugh, bishop of Waterford and Lismore in Ireland, who endowed it with lands for the education of twenty boys, sons of the poorer sorts of burgesses, failing whom, for the like number of sons of the poorest inhabitants. "The property with which it is endowed," observes Mr. Sedgwick, one of the late charity commissioners, "is an extensive wild and barren mountain tract, of little worth for agricultural purposes, but will be of immense value as soon as facilities are given for working, and an outlet opened for the disposal of the coal with which it, in common with the surrounding country, abounds. It is let to William Hopkins as yearly tenant, at a rent of £70. The school and school-house have been partially rebuilt within the last fifty years, but are now, particularly the former, in a very dilapidated state. Neither are occupied by the master, but are let by him to Edward Raynor, carpenter and house-builder, at a rent of £20; the school room has been converted into a workshop. The school, as a foundation school, is of no benefit to the poor of Swansea, the free education being restricted to the Greek and Latin languages, while the general English course of education is charged at the usual rate of £4 per annum. The chief dependence of the master appears to be upon pay scholars, whom he is at liberty to receive without limitation; and the house in which he now resides is calculated, both from its situation and appearance, rather for the boarder than the free boy. The result is, that there are no boys upon the foundation, and the master receives not only the whole of this income, but also a grant from the corporation of £20 per annum, while his appointment is made a sinecure." The town is well supplied with an infirmary. Swansea was originally incorporated by Henry III., and privileges were conferred, which were subsequently confirmed by four different monarchs. Petty sessions for the hundred are held here. The income of the corporation amounts to about £3,460 a year, the whole of which is applied to parochial objects. By the Reform Act the borough is made to extend over the town of Swansea, the hamlet of St. Thomas, the parish of St. John, part of the hamlet of Lower-Clase, in the parish of Llangefelach, and parts of the hamlets of Higher and Lower Llansamlet. Under the municipal act the borough is governed by six aldermen and eighteen common councillors. —Contains 2,913 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 19,115: ass^d. prop^r. £32,560. —Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs: Easter and Whit-Tuesday; second Saturday in May; July 2; Aug. 15; Oct. 8, and the two next Saturdays, for cattle, sheep, and hogs. —Bankers: Branch of Bank of England—draw on the Bank of England; Glamorganshire Banking Co.—draw on Jones, Lloyd, & Co.—Inn: Bush Castle. Sir John is the representative of a family that can boast of having been sheriffs of the county long before the Conquest. During the many centuries that afterwards elapsed, they always held a distinguished position; and at length Sir William Harold, Knt., who was high sheriff of Lincolnshire in 1630, was created a baronet in 1642. From him the present honourable baronet is a lineal descendant.

SYWELL, NORTHAMPTON, a parish in the hun^d. of Hamfordshoe, union of Wellingborough: 73 miles from London (coach road 72), 5 from Wellingborough, 7 from Northampton. — Nor. West. TABLEY (NETHER, or INFERIOR), a township in Great Budworth parish—(which see for access, &c.)—union of Altrincham: 175 miles from London, 5 from Northwich, 2 from Knutsford. Money orders issued at Knutsford: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. The township contains 1,240 acres: popⁿ in 1841, 108: do. in 1851, 123: poor rates in 1848, £77. 8s. Sir Peter Leycester, the antiquary, was born here in 1612; and here still is the seat of that ancient and now noble family. Part of the ancient residence still remains, and from its peculiar situation, picturesque appearance, and venerable character becomes highly interesting. It stands in a low sequestered spot on a small island, surrounded by a fine lake. On this island too there is a small domestic chapel, in which divine service is weekly performed; the present chaplain is the Rev. John Holme. The family burying-place is at Great-Budworth. The mansion is a large and handsome edifice, in the Doric style, composed of brick and stone. The stables are spacious, and the grounds very beautiful. Lord de Tabley is the representative of a family of very great antiquity, having been possessed of lands in the county of Chester as early as the reign of King John; but the village of Nether Tabley manor and mansion came to them through Margaret Dutton, heiress of Jeffrey Dutton, in this county, who, in 1272, married Sir Nicholas Leicester, Knt. The eldest son of this couple built the striking old manor-house of Tabley; and one of whose descendants, Peter Leycester, Esq., the eminent antiquarian and historian of Cheshire, spoken of above, was created a baronet in 1660. From him was descended Sir John Fleming Leycester, a gentleman singularly distinguished for his knowledge and patronage of the fine arts, and who was elevated to the peerage in 1826, by the title of Baron de Tabley; but was succeeded in the title and estates within about a twelvemonth by his lordship, the present peer.

TABLEY (OVER, or SUPERIOR), CHESTER, a township in Rothen parish: 174 miles from London, 10 from Warrington, 8 from Altrincham. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) Contains 2,650 acres: 86 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 510: poor rates in 1848, £222. 3s.

Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Leamington, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through Rugby to Leamington, &c., 64 miles. Money orders issued at Warwick: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. One of the schools here is endowed with £40 per annum: other charities producing about £5 a year, belong to Tachbrook and Milverston. The living (St. Chad), a vicarage, a peculiar in the diocese of Worcester, is valued at £5. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £293: patron, Bishop of Lichfield: pres. incumbent, C. Proby, 1804: contains 3,950 acres: 132 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 723: ass^d. prop^r £7,175: poor rates in 1848, £236. 10s.

TACHBROOK-MALLORY, WARWICK, a township in the above parish—(which see for access, &c.) According to Dugdale, the common name of this parish is derived from the little stream which flows between it and the adjoining places, and was acquired about the time of the Conquest.

TACKLEY, OXFORD, a parish in Wootton hun^d, union of Woodstock: 72 miles from London (coach road 63), 3 from Woodstock, 9 from Oxford. Gt. West. Rail. to Oxford, thence 9 miles: from Derby, through Rugby and Banbury to Oxford, &c., 104 miles. Money orders issued at Oxford: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. Some trifling charities belong to the parish. The living (St. Nicholas), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Oxford, is valued at £19. 9s. 4½d: pres. net income, £742: patron, St. John's College, Oxford: pres. incumbent, L. A. Sharpe, 1839: contains 3,040 acres: 93 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 583: ass^d. prop^r £2,219: poor rates in 1848, £191. 19s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

TACOLNESTON (vulgarly TACLESTON), NORFOLK, a parish in the hun^d and union of Depwade: 125 miles from London (coach road 98), 4 from St. Mary's-Stratton, 11 from Norwich. East. Co^t. Rail. to Norwich, thence 11 miles: from Derby, through Syston and Peterborough to Norwich, &c., 177 miles. Corbould: contains 1,540 acres: 89 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 518: ass^d. prop^r £2,227: poor rates in 1848, £344. 12s.

TADCASTER, YORK, a parish and market town, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the lower division of the ainstey of the city of York, situated on the river Wharfe: the parish includes the townships of Stutton with Hazlewood, Catterton, Oxtou, and Tadcaster: 209 miles from London (coach road 192), 10 from York, 7 from Wetherby. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and Church-Fenton, to Tadcaster station: from Derby, through Church-Fenton, &c., 77 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 6.35 p.m. The town is built in the form of a cross, being very agreeably situated on the river Wharfe, which is navigable up to the town, and over which there is a bridge of nine arches; the middle of the stream dividing the wapentake of Barkstone-Ash from the ainsteiy of York. It was originally the station of the Romans, called Calcaria, being regarded by them as one of the principal outposts of their station at York; and many Roman coins have been found here. During the civil wars of England, this was always esteemed to be a place of importance, and the possession of it was therefore very often violently contested; and at one time, during the war between Charles and his parliament, was assailed by the Earl of Newcastle, in consequence of whose attack, Sir Thomas Fairfax withdrew his troops in the night. Most of the houses are well built, and in the neighbourhood there are several stone quarries. The church, which is erected on the site of the ancient castle, is a handsome structure, with a tower, nave, side aisles, and chancel. The free grammar-school was founded for twenty boys, and the hospital of Jesus for twelve poor men, by Dr. Ogilethorpe, Bishop of Carlisle, in the reign of Philip and Mary: their annual income is now about £155 a year. The other charities, principally bequeathed by Mrs. Dawson, now produce about £380 a year. From him was descended Richard-ap-Illwell, who was of Mostyn. During the time that Henry Earl of Richmond was secretly laying the foundation for the overthrow of the House of York, he passed concealed from place to place, in order to form an interest among the Welsh, who favoured his cause on account of his grandfather, Owen Tudor, their countryman. While he was at Mostyn, a party attached to Richard III. arrived there to apprehend him. He was about to dine, but had just time to leap out of a back-window and make his escape through a hole, which to this day is called the 'king's hole.' From him was descended Edward Mostyn, Esq., of Talacre, who was created a baronet in 1670. Of that gentleman the present baronet is a direct descendant.

TAMWORTH, STAFFORD, a parish, borough, and market town, in the union of Tamworth, partly in the south division of Offlow hun^d, in the above county, and partly in Tamworth division, Hemlingford hun^d, county of Warwick, at the confluence of the rivers Thame and Anker: the parish includes the town of Tamworth, the chapelries of Fazeley, Wiggington, Wilnecote, Amington, and Hopwas, the townships of Biddescote, Bonehill, Bolehall-with-Glascote, and the liberties of Tamworth-Castle and Syerscote: 110 miles from London (coach road 115), 7 from Lichfield, 14 from Birmingham. —Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Tamworth station: from Derby, through Burton to Tamworth, &c., 24 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 2 p.m.: post closes 8½ a.m. and 10 p.m. —Tamworth derives its name from the two rivers on which it stands, the Thame and the Anker, over which there are two bridges, which are chiefly kept in repair by the corporation. Its early history appears to be unknown, but certainly, at a very ancient period, it became a town of note. During the Saxon heptarchy it was the most favourite residence of the Mercian kings, many of whom dated their charters from here, under its then designation of Tameneordrige or Tamwemina. Lambard, in speaking of it, says:—Tamworthe, Tome-wortheige, Szaronice. Although I have not hitherto found anythings of the foundation of Tamworthe, other than that Elfreda (the wife of Ethelred, and sister to Edw. thelder) buylded theare; yet I am out of all doubt that it was not only a towne before that tyme, but the kinges palaeice, and one of the cheif places in al Mercia; for I finde in the chronicles of Worcester, dyvers donations mad: 100 yeares before her tyme, some by Bertwulfe, some by Kenulf, some by Burhred, all kinges of Mercia, in some of which Tamworthe is called Villa Regalis; in others, Locus famosus; in others, notus, illustris, and celebris. And thearfor I beleve that the better which Thon Rosse affirmeth of her buyldinge, that is to say, that she made a castle theare as she had done at Warwyke before; and that also which the continuor of Asserus hath, that she repaired Tamworthe. This Elfreda was sister to Kinge Edw. thelder, and after the death of Ethelred her husband, the duke of Mercia, she governed that countrey by the space of eight yeares politioquely toward her subjects, and defended it valiantly against the Danes her enemies, by whome, in comparison of the men of that age, it might have bene truly said, Vos etenim juvenes animos geritis muliebres, Illaque virgo viri. Immediately upon the understandinge of her deathe, in 919, Kinge Edw. came to Tamworthe, and toke it into his possession, fearinge that the Danes should have occupi'd the place. Editha, the daughter of this kinge, lyeth buried at Tamworthe, and was honoured for a sainte, as Thom Rudborne witnesseth. At the coronation of Kinge Rich. II., Syr Badwryn Frevile claymed as heire to Phillip Marmion to do the challenge (as Dymmoc did for Scrinelby) by reason of the tenure of Tamworthe: but upon discrete debate it was adjudged against him, and graunted Dymmoc. What tyme Kinge Henry VII. was in the field against Richard, the same night that his army lodged at Tamworthe, he wandered and lost himselfe, and came not to his souldiours until the next morninge; which thinge, though it muche amased them and feared him, yet he so used the matter at his retorne, that they beleved he had done it of set policie. The place is otherwise of great historical note, and from it the Earl Ferrers, whose principal residence is at Chartley Castle, in Staffordshire, derives his secondary title of Viscount of Tamworth. The town is well built, and the streets are well paved and lighted with gas. The church is an ancient edifice, surmounted by a tower with lofty pinnacles, supposed to have been dedicated to St. Editha, by whom, it is said, a nunnery was founded on its site; it was formerly collegiate, and possessed a dean and six prebendaries. In 1809 the church was repaired and renovated at a cost of £4,000, to which the late Sir Robert Peel, and the Marquis of Townshend, contributed very handsomely. Fazeley chapel is a perpetual curacy, of the annual value of £236: patron, Sir Robert Peel. Wiggington and Wilnecote are also perpetual curacies, the former valued at £92, the latter at £90; both in the patronage of the perpetual curate of Tamworth. Amington and Hopwas are curacies. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1837; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1800; a Baptist; and chapels belonging to the Society of Friends, Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics; the last of these is a handsome edifice, erected in 1829. The free grammar-school existed in the time of Edward VI., and was then endowed with £10. 13s. 2½d., payable annually out of the Crown revenues for the county of Stafford. It was refounded, in 1588, by Queen Elizabeth, who confirmed the original endowment, which has been augmented by subsequent benefactions to £35. 11s. 3d. At the period of the municipal inquiry, there were twenty-four boys on the foundation. Sir Robert Peel has erected a handsome school-house here. Rawlet's free school, in Church Street, was founded, in 1686, for the education of twelve boys and ten girls. There is an excellent subscription library at Colehill. In 1724, an almshouse for fourteen poor persons was founded and endowed by Thomas Guy, Esq.; income, in 1824, £183. 6s., of which £35 were distributed among poor relations of the founder. The almshouse, which was rebuilt about fourteen years ago, occupies the site of a religious house founded by Philip Marmion, in the time of Edward I. Other charities yield about £280 per annum, part of which is applied in educating, and part in apprenticing, poor children. On 23d February, 1837, there were nine trustees appointed to manage those charities, which were previously under the control of the corporation. Most of the privileges of Tamworth, as a borough, are obtained from prescription; but what may be termed its valid incorporation was derived from a charter granted by Queen Elizabeth, the specifications of which correspond, in all material respects, with those in the charter subsequently given by Charles II. Under the municipal act, the boundaries comprise the old borough and grounds adjacent, in the county of

Warwick, which have of late years been built upon, and a commission of the peace has been granted; it is now governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors, under the usual corporate style, their income being about £370 a year. The town-hall is an elegant edifice, where assemblies are generally held; it was originally erected in 1707, by Thomas Guy, Esq., but has recently been much improved. The Moat-house, at the end of Lichfield Street, is a curious mansion, erected by the Comberfords in 1572. The old castle, which stands on a lofty artificial mount, on the south-east side of the town, is still kept in very tolerable repair. Until the commencement of the last century, it was the regular seat of its lords, the first of whom was Robert Marmion, one of the followers of the Conqueror, and one of whose descendants has been immortalised by Sir Walter Scott. Mr. White, in his erudite history of Staffordshire, in speaking of this place, says—"Its embattled walls and towers have a dull and heavy appearance; but the elevation of its site and the umbrageous foliage of the surrounding declivities, throw around it an air of considerable grandeur. All the apartments, except the dining and drawing-rooms, are extremely inconvenient and irregular; and many of them are much injured by the corroding hand of time, and the want of necessary repairs. The architecture is of various periods, and the chief object of attraction is the beautiful view which the castle-lands command of the town and the surrounding country." Of Drayton Manor, the elegant seat of Sir Robert Peel, which stands about two miles distant, we have spoken elsewhere—(see DRAYTON.) A workhouse has been erected here, which is capable to accommodate 170 persons. Tamworth poor-law union comprises twenty-four parishes, with a population of about 13,000 persons, spread over an area of 29 square miles. The living, a vicarage in the archd^y of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £16: pres. net income, £200: patron, Adm. & Court Kington: pres. incumbent, Edw. Haiston, 1845: contains 19,923 acres: 1,468 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 7,746: do. in 1851, 8,908: ass^d prop^r £21,667: poor rates in 1848, £2,479. Tithes commuted in 1839. Market day, Saturday. Fairs: last Monday in Jan., first Monday in March, first Monday in April, May 4, July 26, first Monday in Sept., Oct. 24, and Dec. 15, for cattle. Bankers: National Provincial Bank of England—draw on London and Westminster Bank, and London Joint Stock Bank. Inns: White Horse, and White Lion. Hotels: King's Arms, and Tamworth Arms. The Castle, an ancient pile of building, standing upon an artificial mount, is one of the seats of the Marquis Townshend. His lordship derives his descent from Lodovick, a noble Norman, who, settling in England in the time of Henry I., assumed the surname of Townshend, and, by marriage with Elizabeth, the heiress of Sir Thomas de Haville, obtained the manor of Raynham, in Norfolk, which has ever since remained in the possession of the family. From this personage, through a long line of ancient posterity, was descended Sir Horatio, who, having rendered essential services to the royal cause during the Protectorate of Cromwell, and largely aided in the restoration of the monarchy, was, in 1661, elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Townshend, of Lyme-Regis; and, in 1682, was advanced to the dignity of Viscount Townshend, of Raynham. Charles, the second viscount, was a diplomatist, held many high offices in the state, and was appointed lord-lieutenant of Ireland. The grandson of that nobleman married Elizabeth, who was, in her own right, Baroness Ferrers of Chartley, and also Baroness of Compton. The viscount, who was a distinguished military commander, was, in 1787, elevated to the dignity of Marquis Townshend. George, the second marquis, was also created Earl of Leicester. In all his honours he was, in 1811, succeeded by the present peer.

Money orders issued at Godstone: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. There was here, says Bishop Tanner, an hospital for three priests and several poor brethren, or, as in later times it was more generally accounted, a priory of Austin canons, founded temp. Rich. I., to which Odo de Dammartin was a great benefactor. It was ded. to St. James; valued 26th Henry VIII. at £78. 6s. 10d., ob. per annum, Dudg.; Speed, £86. 7s. 6d., ob. in toto; and granted 29th Henry VIII. to John Rede. The Roman road runs near here. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archd^y of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester: pres. net income, £78: patron, C. H. Turner, Esq.: pres. incumbent, A. R. Campbell, 1842: contains 3,720 acres: 83 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 674: ass^d prop^r £3,139: poor rates in 1848, £576. 17s. Tandridge Court, and also Tandridge Hall, are the property of the present Earl of Cottenham. He succeeded his father, the first earl, April 29, 1851, whose family, an ancient one in Norfolkshire and Cambridgeshire, was seated first at Diss, in the former, and afterwards at Cottenham, in the latter county. Several of its members have attained high legal eminence, while others have embraced other professional pursuits. One of them, William, a banker in London, had two sons. The elder, William Weller, became a master in Chancery, was created a baronet in 1801, and married Elizabeth, daughter of the Right Hon. E. Dowdcombe, Chancellor of the Exchequer, by whom he left issue. The second son, Lucas, became physician to George III., was created a baronet in 1784, married the Countess of Roths, and died in 1828, leaving issue by her—Henrietta, Countess of Devon, who died in 1839; Charles, who inherited his father's title; Henry, who succeeded his brother: both dying without issue, the title descended to Sir Weller Petoys, who had succeeded to his father's in 1825; he died in 1845, and was succeeded in his title and estates by his brother. The Earl of Cottenham, the present and second earl, succeeded to the same on the 29th of April, 1851.

TAN-Y-BWLCH, MERIONETH, a hamlet in Llanfrothen parish—(which see for access, &c.)—North Wales, on the banks of the river Dwyryd: 224 miles from London, 4 from Tremadoc, 9 from Harlech. — There is a small Calvinistic Methodist chapel in the village.

TAPLOW, BUCKINGHAM, a parish in Burnham hun^d, union of Eton, on the eastern bank of the Thames: 23 miles from London (coach road 26), 1 from Maidenhead, 6 from Windsor. — Gt. West. Rail. to Maidenhead, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through London, &c., 155 miles. — Money orders issued at Maidenhead: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. — The church is a neat structure, lately built of brick, at a short distance from the former edifice, the remains of which are now a picturesque ruin. In it were interred the remains of Mary, the mother of the immortal poet Milton, who resided here for several years. Clifden, in this parish, was the residence of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the parents of George III. It formerly belonged to the Hamilton family, one of whom, having fought under the Duke of Marlborough, took a curious fancy to plant the grounds in imitation of the position of the British troops at the battle of Blenheim. — The living (St. Nicholas), a rectory in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £11. 18s. 9d.: pres. net income, £329: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, C. Whately, 1850: contains 1,920 acres: 113 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 744: ass^d prop^r £3,681: poor rates in 1848, £324. Tithes commuted in 1779. — Taplow House, an elegant mansion, is the seat of Joseph Sandars, Esq. The grounds are finely timbered, and on the lawn are some of the most beautiful specimens of the tulip-tree, catalpa, cedar, cut leaf beech, deciduous cypress, and arbor vitæ, to be found in England. — Taplow Court is the seat of the Earl of Orkney, who derives his descent from Lord George Hamilton, son of Lord William Douglas, who was created Duke of Hamilton for life, and who was elevated to the peerage of Scotland in 1696, by the titles of Baron Dechmont, Viscount Kirkwall, and Earl of Orkney. That nobleman was a distinguished military commander, and from him the present noble earl is a lineal descendant. — Hedsor Lodge is the seat of George Ireby, D.C.L., Baron Boston. His lordship is the representative of a very ancient family, early seated at Ireby in the county of Lincoln, and one of whom, Anthony Ireby, Esq., an eminent lawyer, a bencher and autumn reader to the Society of Lincoln's Inn, had a son, Sir Anthony Ireby, Knt., M.P., who was high sheriff of the county. The son of that gentleman, also a knight, was made recorder of Boston. His grandson, Edward Ireby, Esq., was created a baronet in 1704; and his grandson, Sir William Ireby, having for many years sat in parliament, and filled several high offices in the state, was, in 1761, elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Boston.

R. H. Clive: pres. incumbent, J. F. Mackarness, 1845: contains 8,640 acres: 946 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,877: do. in 1851, 5,608: ass^d prop^r £6,474: poor rates in 1848, £1,174. 5s. Tithes commuted in 1839. — The vicarage is the residence of Walter Hutchison Aston, Baron Aston of Forfar, in the peerage of Scotland, a clergyman of the Church of England, who traces his descent from Randolph or Ranulph de Astona, who lived in the reign of Edward I.; the fifth in descent from whom, Sir Roger de Aston, Kat., served the office of sheriff of Staffordshire in the reign of Henry VI., and was one of the prime gentry returned by the commissioners for that county in 1433. The great-grandson of that gentleman served with Henry VIII. in the French war of 1513, and was made a banneret for his conduct at the battle of Spurs, and also distinguished himself in other engagements. From him was descended Sir Walter Aston, who figured at the coronation of James I., and was, in 1611, created a baronet. Subsequently, in 1622, he was employed to negotiate a marriage between Charles I. and the Infanta of Spain, for which service he was elevated to the peerage as Baron Aston of Forfar. From that nobleman the present baron is a direct descendant.

Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe to Beeston station, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through Crewé, &c., 70 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. This, which is a place of great antiquity, is pleasantly situated on the old coach road from London to Chester, and within one mile of the Nantwich and Chester Canal. It is well built, and consists chiefly of one long street, paved; the inhabitants being principally engaged in agricultural pursuits. The dissenting chapels are various and comparatively numerous. One of the schools here has been endowed by Lady Done with £20 per annum. The central national school was established in 1848. Almshouses for four poor widows were founded and endowed in 1704 by Sir John Crew, and each of the inmates now receives £1. 10s. per annum. About two miles southward of the town are the remains of Beeston Castle, which at one time was proverbially impregnable. It was erected in the early part of the 13th century on the summit of a rock nearly 400 feet high; but, during the civil war, it was taken and dismantled by the parliament. The living (St. Helen), a rectory in the arch^d. and diocese of Chester, is valued at £20. 3s. 4d.: pres. net income, £644: patrons, Dean and Chapter of Chester, Lord Alvanley, and Sir P. G. Egerton: pres. incumbent, R. J. Statham, 1830: contains 5,940 acres: 465 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,546: do. in 1851, 2,928: ass^d. prop^y £9,662: poor rates in 1848, £908. Market day, Thursday. Fairs: May 1, Monday after St. Bartholomew, and December 11. Swan Inn. The Hall is the seat of Lord Alvanley, who derives his immediate descent from Sir Ralph Arderne of Arderne, who died about 1420, leaving two sons, the elder of whom inherited the estate of Arderne. From him, through several generations, was descended Richard Pepper Arden, Esq., an eminent lawyer, who successively filled the offices of solicitor and attorney-general, master of the rolls, and was ultimately made chief-justice of the Court of Common Pleas in 1801, when he was elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Alvanley of Alvanley in Cheshire. His lordship died in 1804, when he was succeeded by the present baron.—Eaton Banks is the seat of Major-General Egerton.

Coast Rail. to Worthing, thence 1½ mile: from Derby, through London to Worthing, &c., 195 miles. Money orders issued at Worthing: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. In the town itself is contained the so-called palace of Thomas à Becket, who is supposed to have visited it in his progresses, and to have brought with him the celebrated figs for which the parish is noted. The learned and patriotic Selden was a native of Salvington, in this parish; and the house in which he was born, called Lacies, is still standing. He was born in 1584: and after having received his education at Chichester, and Hart Hall, Oxford, was called to the bar by the Society of the Middle Temple. After that he practised chiefly as a chamber counsel, but bestowed much of his time on the study of the history and antiquities of his country. His works were numerous, and he attained to great reputation. At the outbreak of the civil war, King Charles I. was inclined to make him Chancellor; but in 1643 the House of Commons appointed him Keeper of the Records of the Tower, and the following year one of the Commissioners of the Admiralty, voting him £5,000 as a reward for his services. He was universally esteemed for his urbanity and goodness of heart. He died in 1654. It is supposed to have been built of wood; and having served as a stronghold and sustained several sieges during twenty-one years, was pulled down. Another castle, however, was built about the time of the Conquest, by Walkelin, bishop of Winchester, and enlarged by his successor, William Gifford, and a part of this structure still remains on the west side of the town. The assize-hall was built in 1577 by Bishop Horne, whose successors resided in the castle, and the courts of the bishop of Winchester are still held there. Many Roman relics have been discovered in the neighbourhood. The town is large and well built, and is indeed one of the most pleasing in the county, consisting principally of four or five streets, well paved and lighted with gas, from which there are several minor places, lanes, and alleys, called "colleges," which are close and unhealthy; but, on the whole, Taunton is considered a very salubrious locality, most of the good houses having gardens behind them, which contribute not only much to the appearance, but to the healthiness of the town. The country around, a large and fertile vale, is rich in orchards, and the villages being peculiarly pleasing, makes the situation of the town one of especial attractiveness. The market-house stands in the centre of the town, and is a large and handsome structure, devoted to various purposes, the lower part being occupied as a town-hall. The living of St. James is a perpetual curacy; certified at £2. 13s. 4d., returned at £100; gross income, £255. Tithes commuted in 1839. Patron, in 1841, Sir T. B. Lethbridge, Bart. The living of St. Mary Magdalene is a vicarage; rated at £20. 3s. 4d., returned at £74. 0s. 4d. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £390. Patron, in 1841, Lord Portman. St. Decuman's is a vicarage, of the annual value of £134. Patron, Prebendary in Wells cathedral. Williton chapel is a perpetual curacy, of the annual value of £53. Patron, the Vicar of St. Decuman's. These livings are all in the archd^y of Taunton, and diocese of Bath and Wells. The church of St. James is an old building, with a square tower and six bells, and is supposed to have been erected in the 13th century; it has been recently enlarged. St. Mary Magdalene's is a large and handsome structure, with a western tower of excellent and ornamented workmanship, with 13 windows, and rising to a height of 153 feet, the summit being crowned with pinnacles. This is unquestionably one of the finest towers in England. From its style of architecture, it was probably erected about the year 1480. The following is from Tanner's Notitia Monastica:—On the east part of this town was a priory of Black canons, erected by William Gifford, bishop of Winchester, temp. Hen. I., to the honour of St. Peter and St. Paul. It was valued, 26th Hen. VIII., at £286. 8s. 10d. per ann. Dugd.; £438. 9s. 10d. Speed; and granted, 36th Hen. VIII., to Matthew Colehurst. Here were also an ancient leper-house, near the chapel of St. Margaret; and a house of White or Carmelite friars. A Presbyterian church was formed here in 1646; an Independent, in 1672; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1778; a Baptist, in 1815; and there are places of worship for other congregations of Dissenters, including the Society of Friends, and Unitarians; and for Roman Catholics. Some of the chapels belonging to these bodies are superior and even elegant structures. The Taunton and Somerset Institution here has a valuable library, reading-room, and museum. There is a neat theatre in the town. A grammar-school was founded here, in 1522, by Richard Fox, bishop of Winchester, and the school-house erected within the precincts of the castle, in the parish of Bishop's-Hull. The income of this charity is about £30 per annum. The Taunton and Somerset hospital owes its origin to the celebration of the jubilee on 25th October, 1809, the day on which George III. entered the 50th year of his reign. Besides the charities already noticed, there are several other endowed charities of some value. The town lands, at the period of the charity inquiry in 1820, yielded £368. 10s. per annum. Huish's charity consists of an hospital for "relief of such as are comfortless," and more particularly devoted to the accommodation of "thirteen poor, needy, maimed, impotent, aged men," one of whom, the president, was appointed to read prayers daily, and receive 7s. a week, and the rest 5s.; besides clothing, coals, blankets, &c., to all: income of the charity, £363. 10s. per annum. Gray's almshouses were founded and endowed for ten poor men, including a reader, and six or seven poor women, all receiving 3s. a week, except the reader, who has 6s.: income of the charity, £179 per annum. There are a number of other almshouses occupied rent-free by poor people, but little or no endowment to most of them. Minor charities, including such endowments as these possess, but exclusive of those of WILTON and BISHOP'S-HULL—which see,—about £200 per annum. There is still a considerable manufacture of silk in the town, but the woollen trade which formerly existed here has gone to the great mills in Yorkshire. Taunton is a borough by prescription, and its prescriptive rights were confirmed at a very early period by a charter, of which it was deprived by Charles II., on account of its adherence to the parliamentary cause; but he restored its privileges about 17 years afterwards, from which time it continued to be governed by a mayor, recorder, aldermen and burgesses, and other officers; but the borough is not included in the schedules of the Municipal Act. There is one peculiar character about Taunton—for estates descend to the widow of the last possessor as heir, and the younger son inherits before the elder. The Lent assizes and the Michaelmas sessions for the county, with the Michaelmas criminal business of the western division only, are held here in the assize-hall, into which the great hall of the castle was converted. Taunton is a polling-place, and the place of election for the western division of the county. —Contains 2,730 acres: 2,024 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 12,066: do. in 1851, 13,876: ass^d. prop^y £26,955: poor rates in 1848, £3,583. 17s. —Market days: Wednesday and Saturday. Micklethwait: pres. incumbent, R. C. Burton, 1850: contains 2,630 acres: 16 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 211: ass^d prop^y £1,013: poor rates in 1848, £174. 10s. — The Hall, a fine mansion, commanding beautiful and extensive views, is the seat of Nathaniel Micklethwait, Esq., who has also a seat at Beeston Hall in this county, and who inherited the estates of Sir William Micklethwait, ancestor of the extinct family of the Viscounts Micklethwait. This gentleman, who served as high sheriff in 1810, is a magistrate for the county.

TAVISTOCK, Devon, an ancient borough, market town, and parish, in the hun^d and union of Tavistock, on the river Tavy, which is here crossed by three bridges, and on the line of the Tavistock Canal, which unites it for water communication with the river Tamer: 257 miles from London (coach road 207), 12 from Launceston, 13 from Plymouth. — Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Plymouth, thence 13 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 271 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 9½ a.m.: post closes 3.25 p.m. — The town owes its origin to the establishment of a noble abbey here in the tenth century, by Orgar, Earl of Devonshire. Though burnt to the ground by the Danes, it was rebuilt, and the establishment became more flourishing than before, additional grants and immunities having been conferred upon it by various persons. By Henry I. the abbots acquired jurisdiction over the whole hun^d of Tavistock, together with a weekly market and a three-days' fair; and their riches and emoluments eventually attained their climax in the time of Henry VIII., who granted a mitre to their principal, or, in other words, the right to sit in the House of Peers; but very shortly afterwards put an end to his power and dignity together. At the general dissolution of the monasteries, the income of the abbacy amounted to upwards of £900 a year, an immense sum in those days, out of which the abbot obtained £100 a year for his personal support. The abbey, together with the lands, the manor, and the tower of Tavistock, were granted to John Lord Russell, whose descendants, the Dukes of Bedford, have ever since retained them. The remains of this extensive edifice are remarkably striking and beautiful. Tavistock stands on the north-western bank of the river, in a valley surrounded with most pleasing scenery, for the hills are graceful in form, and the river runs with great rapidity over the vast portions of rock that form its bed. The whole parish abounds with rivulets of the purest water, and the woods are peculiarly luxuriant. The town is irregular in its form, but the approach from it is admirable. Many of the houses are old, but respectable in their antiquity, though the streets are, for the most part, narrow and indifferently paved, but several of them are lighted with gas. The church is a spacious and imposing edifice with a lofty tower, under which there is an archway forming the connection between the abbey precinct and the town. The Independents, Presbyterians, and Wesleyan Methodists, have chapels in the town. A public library, now occupying part of the abbey buildings, was instituted in 1822, under the auspices of the Rev. Mr. Bray, the incumbent. Under similar patronage, an institution for the promotion of science, literature, &c., with a museum, has also been formed, and lectures are delivered weekly during the winter session, followed by discussion. There is a library in the town, the books of which are lent out gratis to the poor. One of the schools here, a grammar-school, containing five males, was supported by the Duke of Bedford. Amongst the charities of Tavistock are a very useful dispensary, a Dorcas society, a lying-in charity, various clubs, and a savings bank. Besides these there are several endowed charities of some value, the principal of which are those entitled "the charities settled by act of parliament," which yield about £120 per annum, expended partly in keeping in repair certain almshouses belonging to the charity, in contributing £3 per annum to each of fifteen almspeople, and in paying apprentice fees, small marriage portions, &c. Other almshouses here are those of Lord Courtenay for four poor widows: income, £8. 12s. The gift-house is occupied by fifteen or sixteen poor families. Watt's gift to the poor yielded, at the time of the inquiry, £72. 3s. 8d. per annum, and Sir John Glanville's gift for a scholarship, £15 per annum: this latter sum had not been made available since 1796. Here, says Tanner, were anciently an hospital for lepers, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and a house for friars Augustines. Tavistock is a borough by prescription, governed by a portreeve, appointed at a court-leet by the steward of the Duke of Bedford, and eight masters, at the head of whom is the steward. They have a magisterial power of committing offenders. The town has returned two members to parliament ever since the 23d of Edward I., but the parliamentary limits of the borough were, by the Reform Act, extended to the whole boundaries of the parish. There are several mines for various kinds of minerals in the neighbourhood, in which many of the inhabitants are employed. This place was the birth-place of Sir Francis Drake, the Englishman who navigated the globe; of William Browne, the author of "Britannia's Pastorals;" and is now the residence of its excellent vicar, the Rev. E. Bray, who, with his talented lady, has won a high reputation in various branches of literature. The Tavistock poor-law union comprises 24 parishes, with a population of about 21,000 persons, spread over an area of 242 square miles. — The living (St. Eustace), a vicarage in the archd^y of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £10. 17s. 6d.: pres. net income, £298: patron, Duke of Bedford: pres. incumbent, E. TEIGNMOUTH (WEST), DEVON, a parish, sea-port, and market town, in Exminster hun^d, union of Newton-Abbots, at the mouth of the Teign: 178 miles from London, 14 from Exeter, 7 from Torquay.---(For access and postal arrangements, see above.)---The town, which stands on a curve formed by a sudden expansion of the river, is irregularly built, but contains many good houses. There are a quay and a dockyard, and a new wharf has been lately constructed. The harbour, which is safe and capacious, is chiefly frequented by vessels in the Newfoundland trade. The chief imports are coal and culm; the exports are of granite and potters' clay, great quantities of the latter being shipped for the Staffordshire potteries. Salmon, salmon-piel, and various other fish, are constantly caught in the river, or off the coast. This town is separated from East Teignmouth by a rivulet called Tame. A bridge of 34 arches, with a swing-bridge in the middle, has been constructed over the Teign, so that vessels of 300 or 400 tons can pass through. This swing-bridge opens in two parts, and is believed to be the largest in the kingdom. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Calvinistic Methodists have chapels here. The charities produce about £21 per annum. Colesworth, 1847: contains 2,350 acres: 72 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 561: ass^d prop^y £3,055: poor rates in 1848, £323. 19s.

TENBURY, WORCESTER, a parish and market town in the upper division of Dodingtree hun^d, union of Tenbury, on the southern bank of the Teme, near the Leominster Canal: the parish comprises the hamlets of Berrington, Sutton, and Tenbury-Foreign: 140 miles from London (coach road 133), 9 from Ludlow, 11 from Leominster. — Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Worcester, thence 22 miles : from Derby, through Birmingham to Worcester, &c., 93 miles. — Money orders issued here : London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m. and 7½ p.m. : post closes 3 p.m. — This town, which occupies a low situation, is generally of only poor appearance, but contains many good houses. It is unfortunately subject to inundations, for the Keyre, a small rapid stream, falls into the Teme at the top of the principal street, and both the rivers here are crossed by bridges of some pretension. The trade of Tenbury consists chiefly in hops and cider ; of the former more than 300 acres being cultivated, and of the latter, large quantities being produced ; but tanning and glove-making are also carried on here to a considerable extent. The church has been much injured by the floods, yet it is still an interesting structure, though not remarkable for its beauty. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here ; the charities produce about £30 a year. The Tenbury poor-law union comprises 19 parishes, with a population of about 7,000 persons, spread over an area of 73 square miles. — The living (All Saints), a vicarage in the archd^y of Salford, and diocese of Hereford, is valued at £21 : pres. net income, £900 : patron, Misses Wilkinson : pres. incumbent, John Churton, 1849 ; contains 5,450 acres : 365 houses : popⁿ. in 1841, 1,849 : do. in 1851, 2,126 : ass^d. prop^r. £7,736 : poor rates in 1848, £659. 10s. — Market day, Tuesday. Fairs : Tuesday before Bromyard March fair, April 21, May 1, Sept. 26, and Dec. 3. — Bankers : Suburban Branch of Ludlow and Tenbury Bank — draw on Barnett, Hoares, & Co. — Royal Oak Inn, and Swan Hotel.

TENBY, PEMBROKE, a borough and seaport town in the parish of St. Mary, hun^d. of Narberth, union of Pembroke, South Wales : 264 miles from London (coach road 244), 10 from Narberth, 10 from Pembroke. — Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse, Gloucester, and Chepstow, to Swansea, thence 50 miles : from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 255 miles. — Money orders issued here : London letters deliv^d. 7.10 p.m. : post closes 10 p.m. — The town is very picturesquely situated on the summit of a limestone ridge, which forms the southern coast of the county of Pembroke, the ruins of an ancient castle crowning its extreme limit. The ridge, curving gently towards the east, encloses a small bay, which has been converted into an excellent and well-sheltered harbour, being covered on the land side by a bold range of acclivitous rocky hills, in the form of an amphitheatre. The houses are generally good, and the streets are clean, and well lighted with gas. The church is a large handsome edifice, surmounted by a lofty spire, and has a curiously carved ceiling, ornamented with armorial bearings. Formerly there were three monastic institutions in the town. The market-house is a small, but yet a pleasing structure. Pipes, connected with springs in the neighbourhood, supply the inhabitants of the town with water. In addition to the hills, the harbour is formed by two piers, which jut out into the water, and which nearly encircle a small but safe place for the anchorage of vessels. The trade of the town is small, but still the port is very active, the imports being chiefly articles for domestic consumption, and the exports of butter, corn, coals, and culm. Some fishing-boats from Plymouth and Broxham make Tenby their station, and an excellent bed of oysters also yields a large profit. But the chief characteristic of the town is, that it is a watering-place largely frequented during the summer months by visitors from all parts of the country. The beauty of its situation, the fineness of the sea, the bold variety of the surrounding scenery, and the various appliances which have been provided for comfort and enjoyment, render this one of the most pleasing places of sojourn in the kingdom. Tenby was originally incorporated about the time of Edward III., by charters granted by the Earls of Pembroke, and subsequently confirmed by Richard and subsequent sovereigns. Under the municipal reform act the borough is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors, in the usual corporate style. Their public income is about £11,000 a year. Tenby, with Pembroke, Wiston, and Milford, contributes to return one member to parliament, and it is a polling-place for the county. — The living (St. Mary), a rectory and vicarage united, in the archd^y and diocese of St. David's, is valued at £39. 17s. 6d. : pres. net income, £317 : patron, the Crown : pres. incumbent, J. H. Humphrey, 1831 : contains 362 houses : popⁿ. in 1841, 2,912 : do. in 1851, 3,349 : ass^d. prop^r. £5,208 : poor rates in 1848, £551. 4s. — Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs : Whit-Tuesday, May 4, July 31, Oct. 2, and Dec. 4, for cattle, horses, and sheep. — White Lion and Coburg Hotels.

TENDRING, ESSEX, a parish in the hun^d. and union of Tendring : 62 miles from London, 11 from Colchester, 10 from Harwich. — East. Co^r. M. Chapman, 1838 : contains 2,350 acres : 141 houses : popⁿ. in 1841, 925 : ass^d. prop^r. £5,826 : poor rates in 1848, £502. — Fair, Sept. 14, for toys.

TENTERDEN, KENT, a borough, parish, and market town, in the cinque-port liberty of Haatings, hun^d. and union of Tenterden, lathe of Scray : 55 miles from London, 10 from Rye, 8 from Cranbrook. — Money orders issued here : London letters deliv^d. 6½ a.m. : post closes 8.50 p.m. — The town is situated on a gentle eminence, in the midst of a rich agricultural country, consisting chiefly of one street, about a mile in length, and contains several houses of highly respectable appearance. The church was a part of the ancient possessions of the monastery of St. Augustine, to which, in 1529, it was appropriated. At the general dissolution of monastic institutions, in the time of Henry VIII., it was granted to the dean and chapter of Canterbury. Smalhythe, the chapelry of this connection, is of the annual value of £107 per annum, in the patronage of the householders of Damborne-in-Tenterden. The old market-house was burnt down in 1660, and a new one was erected in 1792 : it is a neat and commodious building. This place was one of the first towns in which the woollen manufacture was established in England by Edward III., but, of course, that has long since ceased, and the inhabitants are almost entirely occupied in agricultural pursuits. The Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, and Bible Christians, all have chapels here. The charities produce about £140 per annum. Tenterden was first incorporated by Queen Elizabeth; under the municipal act it is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors, with the usual corporate style, the limits of the borough being coextensive with those of the hundred, including a part of the parish of Ebony. Their public income is about £540 a year. The Tenterden poor-law union comprises eleven parishes, with a population of about 11,000 persons, spread over an area of 71 square miles. The living (St. Mildred), a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Canturbury, is valued at £33. 12s. 11d.: pres. net income, £177: patron, Dean and Chapter of Canturbury: pres. incumbent, Philip Ward, 1833: contains 8,620 acres: 548 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,620: do. in 1851, 4,163: ass^d prop^y £14,688: poor rates in 1848, £1,862. 12s. TEWKESBURY, GLOUCESTER, a parish, borough, and market town, in the lower division of the hun^d and union of Tewkesbury, in the vale of Evesham, and on the eastern bank of the Avon, near its junction with the Severn: the parish includes the hamlets of Mythe and Southwick: 124 miles from London (coach road 103), 8 from Cheltenham, 11 from Gloucester. — Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse to Tewkesbury station: from Derby, through Birmingham to Tewkesbury, &c., 82 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d.

7 a.m. and 4.35 p.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. — Tewkesbury, like many other towns in England, derived its origin, and afterwards its importance, from its ecclesiastical establishments, and the note to which they attained. In the middle ages, the chief subject of historical importance connected with it is the decisive battle fought in its neighbourhood, at a place still called the "Bloody Meadow," between the Yorkists and Lancastrians, which placed the crown on the brows of Edward IV. During the war between Charles and his parliament, the town was alternately in the hands of the royalists and their opponents, until, in 1644, it was surprised by the latter, and remained in their possession till the conclusion of the conflict. It consists chiefly of three well-built streets, with several smaller ones, lanes, and alleys, diverging from them. The principal, or High Street, which runs from north to south, is of considerable length, and is spacious and handsome; the other streets, Church Street and Barton Street, are little inferior to it in excellence. The old town-hall, or Tolsey, as it was called, was a mean structure, so placed as to interrupt the thoroughfare, but it was removed in 1788, and a new one was built by Sir William Codrington, one of the members for the borough. A commodious and handsome market-place has also been built by a company to whom the corporation mortgaged the tolls; and, for the accommodation of the river navigation, there are quays on the east side of High Street. The tides from the Severn reach Tewkesbury. The business of the town is of a varied character, but it is a thriving and active place. The ship-money levied upon Tewkesbury was £60. As stated above, the place appears to have derived its origin from its ecclesiastical foundation, for it is recorded that, at a remote period, Tewkesbury possessed an abbey; and William of Malmesbury even attempts to derive the name of the town from the Greek, Theotocos, the Mother of God, or Virgin Mary, to whom the abbey was certainly dedicated—and hence to show that the town owed its origin to the abbey, such edifices being very frequently erected in sequestered localities where no other houses then existed. It appears probable, however, that the town is of somewhat older date than the abbey. Uniform tradition, however, has recorded that Theocus, a religious recluse, lived here, and had a chapel on the banks of the Severn in the 7th century, and hence, probably, the origin of the name of the town (Theotisbourg in the Saxon era), if not of the town and abbey themselves, the site of the hermitage or chapel of a celebrated recluse being often chosen, as consecrated ground, for the erection of stately ecclesiastical edifices, by the devotees previously attracted to the sanctified locality. The abbey is said to have been founded in the year 715 by Odo and Dodo, or Thodo, men no less distinguished for their high rank, as dukes of Mercia, than for their piety and virtue. Thodo was lord of the manor, and it has been thought a probable conjecture that Theocus and Thodo, Theodo, or Theodocus, were one and the same person; being at all events contemporary. The abbey was erected on the site of Thodo's dwelling, and Dodo endowed it with the manor of Stanway in Gloucestershire, and other possessions, sufficient to maintain a prior and four or five monks, who were of the Benedictine order. This abbey afterwards suffered, says Tanner, many calamities during the civil wars about the year 980, and became a priory subject to Cranburn in Dorsetshire. But Robert Fitz-Haimon, a noble Norman, who came in with William the Conqueror, enlarged the buildings and increased the possessions of Tewkesbury so much, that the monks of Cranburn chose, about A.D. 1102, to remove hither and make this the head house, after which it became a great abbey of Benedictine monks, and one of the richest foundations in England; and whatever may have been the origin of the town, there can be little doubt that it also rose into importance with the abbey, sharing its good fortune. The abbots of this monastery were occasionally summoned to parliament. Its possessions were surrendered in 1539, and the last abbot was compensated, for his ready compliance, with the bishopric of Gloucester. The yearly revenues were found to be worth £1,596. 1s. 3d., Dugd., Speed; or, according to Burnet, £1,595. 15s. 6d. The site was granted 36° Henry VIII. to Tho. Strowde, Walter Erle, and James Paget. After the dissolution, the destruction of the monastic buildings, according to Browne Willis, was most rapid and complete, the visitors appointed by the king having, in revenge for an ineffectual opposition by the monks, destroyed the Lady chapel, cloisters, chapter-house, and other appendages, by fire. The abbey remains were purchased by the inhabitants, and the abbey church was repaired and made parochial. This magnificent structure presents an interesting example of early Norman architecture, mixed with specimens of other kinds. It is built in the cruciform cathedral style, and consists of a nave, choir, transept, and massive Anglo-Norman or Saxon central tower, with several chapels. It is fitted up in a style of singular elegance, and there are many beautiful and interesting monuments in the interior—some of them very ancient, others commemorative of individuals who fell in the battle of Tewkesbury. Amongst others, here are the funeral monuments of Prince Edward, son of Edward IV., of the duke of Clarence, brother of Edward IV., and also of several of the ancient earls of Gloucester and Warwick. Near the west end of the church are a few remains of the abbey buildings, with the ancient gatehouse, a large and handsome embattled edifice. A new church or chapel-of-ease was erected here in 1837; it is a plain but tasteful edifice of red brick with stone dressings, and is lighted by seven lofty narrow Gothic windows on each side, and a larger and more ornamental one over the altar. An Independent church was formed here in 1707; and the Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Society of Friends, and Roman Catholics, have places of worship here. A grammar-school, originally attached to the abbey church, was first endowed by Sir Dudley Digges in 1609, the income of which amounts to £52. 0s. 8d. In 1833, there were six scholars on the foundation. A considerable income for charitable purposes is yielded by a number of parochial endowments, the more important of which are the charities under the management of Gyles Geest's Feoffees, yielding, at the period of the inquiry, £251. 8s. per annum; Lord Camden's tithe charity, yielding

£85 per annum; Lord Coventry's and others, yielding £48 per annum; Queen Mary's chartered alms, established for behoof of thirteen poor men, almsmen of the dissolved monastery, and still administered to thirteen poor men, generally aged townsmen, who receive 1s. a week each out of an income amounting to about £35 per annum. Sir Francis Russell, in 1676, founded an almshouse with ten apartments under one roof in the churchyard, to be inhabited by ten aged widows. At the period of the inquiry, this almshouse was in so ruinous a state, that its entire demolition and a re-erection in a more eligible situation was contemplated. The town was first incorporated by Queen Elizabeth. Under the municipal act it is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors, under the usual corporate style; their public income being about £1,200 a year. The Tewkesbury poor-law union comprises twenty-three parishes, with a population of about 15,000 persons, spread over an area of 61 square miles. Pres. net income, £313: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, C. G. It consists principally of one long and spacious street, in the middle of which there are an excellent market-place and a commodious town-hall. Lace manufacture is carried on to some extent, and the river is navigable from this point. There was at Otteley, says Bishop Tanner, in the parish of Oddington, in this county, an abbey of Cistercian monks, founded by Sir Robert Gail, who were shortly after removed, on account of the low and unhealthy situation, to Tame, where Alexander, bishop of Lincoln, gave them his park to build a monastery on, A.D. 1137 or 1138. It was commended—as most of the religious houses of this order were—to the patronage of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and endowed, 26th Henry VIII., with £256. 13s. 7d. ob. per annum, as both Dugdale and Speed. The site was granted to the bishop of Oxford and his successors, 34th Henry VIII.; and afterwards, 1 Edward VI., or Edward IV., Richard Quatermain founded an hospital in this town near the church, and endowed it with lands. The church is a large and handsome structure, and near it are the remains of the ancient prebendal house. The Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyans, all have chapels in the town. One of the schools is endowed with £26 per annum; the other charities produce about £153 per annum. The poor-law commissioners have erected a workhouse here, capable of accommodating 350 inmates. The Thame poor-law union comprises 35 parishes, with a population of about 15,000 persons, spread over an area of 83 square miles.—The living, a disch^d vicarage in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £18: pres. net income, £170: patron, Trustees: pres. incumbent, J. THANET (ISLE OF), KENT.—For a general description of the Isle of Thanet, see the districts. A workhouse has been erected upon the island, which is capable of accommodating four hundred inmates. The Isle of Thanet poor-law union comprises eleven parishes, with a population of about 26,000 persons, spread over an area of 39 square miles.

THANINGTON, KENT, a parish in the lower half hun^d of Westgate, union of Bridge, lathe of St. Augustine, on the river Stour: the parish includes the hamlet of Milton: 55 miles from London, 2 from Canterbury, 9 from Faversham.—Money orders issued at Canterbury: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m.—Tanner, in his Notitia, speaking of this place, says—An ancient hospital was founded here, temp. Henry II., to the honour of St. James, or St. Jacob. It some time consisted of a master or keeper, three priests, a prior ss, and twenty-five leprous sisters. Their revenues were valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £63. 16s. 11d. in the whole, and at £32. 11s. 1d. per annum clear, Dugdale, Speed; or £46. 6s. 3d. as in Somner. It was surrendered into the king's hands 28th February, 1551, and granted 5th Edward VI. to Robert Dartnall.—The living (St. Nicholas), a perpetual curacy in the archd^r and diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £40: pres. net income, £62: patron, Archbishop of Canterbury: pres. incumbent, W. Pearson, 1848: contains 1,420 acres: 59 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 379: ass^d prop^r £2,855: poor rates in 1848, £122. 2s.

Rail. to Elsenham station, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 175 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m.—The town, which is of great antiquity, is situated on the river Chelmer, is large, and contains many good houses. It was formerly a borough, but its corporate capacity was quelled by a qua warranto of James II., when the municipal members retired from office. The church, which is believed to have been built in the time of Edward II., is one of the finest structures in the county, and is a beautiful example of architectural skill—having a noble tower and spire at the west end, the whole edifice being embattled and supported by buttresses, terminated by canopied niches, crowned with pinnacles of curious workmanship. There is a fine stained-glass window at the east end, and the roof is elaborately enriched with carved ornaments. The tower, which had sustained considerable damage by lightning, was rebuilt in 1822. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. The charities of this parish are extensive. An estate, called Yardley's, bequeathed in the reign of Henry VI., now yields £155 per annum, part of which is applied to the maintenance of a school for thirty boys and twenty girls. In 1698, William, Lord Maynard, bequeathed the sum of £4,000 for charitable purposes, which was invested in lands producing, in 1835, £503. 8s. 5½d. per annum. Other charities, in 1836, £161. 19s. 3d. a year. An almshouse, formerly the chantry-house, comprises eight tenements under one roof, each containing one room above and one below: it is now occupied by sixteen poor persons, who are maintained partly by the parish, and partly by the donations which they receive from the funds of the various charities. — The living (the Blessed Virgin Mary), a vicarage in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £24: pres. net income, £450: patron, Viscount Maynard: pres. incumbent, Thomas Jee, 1806: contains 5,890 acres: 466 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,527: do. in 1851, 2,906: ass^d. prop^r £7,829: poor rates in 1848, £1,219. 8s. — Fairs: Monday before Whit-Monday, and Aug. 10. — Horeham Hall, a fine Gothic edifice, partly covered with ivy, about two miles from the town, is the seat of Captain Joddrell, who is a magistrate for the county, and a member of one of the most ancient and honourable families in the country.

THEAKSTONE, NORTH RIDING, YORK, a township in Burneston parish—(which see for access, &c.): 220 miles from London, 4 from Bedale, 6 from Masham. — Money orders issued at Bedale: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. — Contains 790 acres: 15 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 78. THEOBALD'S, HERTFORD, a celebrated locality in Cheshunt parish. It was here that the palace stood which was erected by the celebrated Lord Burleigh, which was often visited by Queen Elizabeth, and which afterwards became the home of James I., was often the scene of his revelries, and where he ultimately died. Charles I. occasionally resided in this palace, and it was here that he received the famous parliamentary petition, that in 1642 became the immediate precursor of the civil war, and ultimately brought the king to the scaffold. During the temporary abolition of royalty, this palace, along with many others, was ordered to be sold. Part of it was accordingly taken down, and the produce of the material was applied to the use of the army. The remainder, with the lands adjoining, were granted to General Monk. It was afterwards granted by William III. to his countryman, Bentinck, Earl of Portland. It then came to Mr. Prescott, who pulled down the remains in 1765, and on the site of it erected the present handsome church. The new mansion is the seat of Sir Henry Meux, Bart., a descendant of Sir Walter Meux of Meaux, in France, and who was created a baronet in 1831.

THETFORD, NORFOLK, a borough and market town in the union of Thetford, and chiefly in the hun^d of Shropham, in the above county, but partly in the hun^d of Lackford, county of Suffolk, on the Little Ouse river, which divides the counties: Thetford comprises three parishes; namely, St. Cuthbert, St. Peter, and St. Mary-the-Less: 80 miles from London, 7 from Brandon, 12 from Bury St. Edmund's. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 10 p.m. —The town is irregularly built, and presents but a scattered appearance, as might be expected of any place which had formerly been extensive, but which had declined in its importance, many of the portions of it being separated from others by gardens and pasture-grounds. It is said, indeed, to have had, at one time, as many as twenty parish churches and eight monasteries, besides other religious and charitable foundations; in consequence of which it acquired the appellation, among the learned of the day, of "Hierapolis" and "Monochopolis," and the ruins still remaining amply attest the greatness and distinction of this churchman "city;" being fully entitled to the appellation, from having been, for a long time, the seat of the see of the bishops of Norfolk and Suffolk, and at one time the capital of East Anglia. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—In this famous town was a society of religious persons to the church of St. Mary, as early as the reign of King Edward the Confessor, if not before. Hither Arfustus, or Herfastus, bishop of the East Angles, removed his episcopal seat from North Elmham, A. D. 1075. But it continued here only 19 or 20 years, and then was translated to Norwich. After which, that great nobleman, Roger Bigod, or Bigot, by the advice of Bishop Herbert and others, built a monastery here about A. D. 1104, and shortly after brought Cluniac monks from Leves in Sussex, and placed them in it, making it subordinate to the abbey of Cluny in France. But this house and place being found inconvenient, the same generous nobleman began, on the other side of the water, a little without the town, a most stately monastery and church to the honour also of the Blessed Virgin Mary. But dying shortly after, Prior Stephen carried on the work, and met with so much encouragement, that he finished it in about seven years, and removed his convent into it on the feast of St. Martin, A. D. 1114. This priory was made denison, 5th Edward III., and, 26th Henry VIII., was found to be endowed with £312. 14s. 4d. ob. q. per annum, as Dugd.; and £418. 16s. 3d. as Speed; and was granted in exchange, 32d Henry VIII., to its patron, Thomas, Duke of Norfolk, who once intended to re-found herein a college of secular priests. Here were also a priory of canons-regular of the order of Holy Sepulchre; a Benedictine nunnery dedicated to St. George; a college or guild dedicated to St. Mary; five hospitals, a house of Austin, and another of Black friars. Four of the hospitals were for lepers. Lambard, in noticing the ancient importance of Thetford, remarks that Doctor Kaius in his booke of thantiquities of Cambridge writeth, that he hath heard saye that there was sometyme a scole or college of 600 studentes in Thetforde, which he supposethe to be more likelie, because he readeth in Jhon Bramys (a monke of Thetforde) that one Ronde was sometyme kinge of that countrye, and that Thetforde was his palacie. But the first mention that I finde amongst receyved chroniclers is, that Theodorus tharchebishop of Canterbury held a general synode or mtyngs of the clergie at Thetforde. Three of the churches only now remain; these are all in the archdioc. and diocese of Norwich, and in the patronage of the Duke of Norfolk. The living of St. Peter's is a rectory, with that of St. Nicholas; rated at £5. 1s. 5½d.; gross income, £55. The church is a large handsome fabric, chiefly of flint, and consisting of a nave, chancel, aisles, and tower; the latter rebuilt in 1789, when a great part of the body was also re-edified: the tower, which is lofty, contains a clock and eight musical bells. The living of St. Cuthbert's is a perpetual curacy; gross income, £50. This curacy was endowed in 1811 and 1813 with £1,600 of royal bounty. St. Cuthbert's church is a smaller edifice than St. Peter's, with a tower and five bells. The living of St. Mary-the-Less is a rectory; rated at £1. 13s. 6½d.; gross income, £83. This benefice was augmented, in 1722–3, with £200 of Queen Anne's bounty, and £200 given by Henry Campion, Esq. The church is the only one now existing on the Suffolk side of the town. It is a large thatched fabric, with a lofty square tower and six bells. Here are an Independent chapel, erected in 1817; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1830; a meeting-house for the Society of Friends; and a Roman Catholic chapel, erected in 1826. The free grammar-school was founded and endowed in 1566; together with an hospital for four almspeople, by Sir Richard Fulmerston, with part of the possessions of the dissolved monasteries. The income of this charity is about £500, of which about one moiety is applicable to the school, which is open to all boys of the borough free of expense for English and the classics. The almspeople receive 5s. a week each, and the master and preacher to the hospital £75 per annum, besides £20 in lieu of a residence. William-son's charity for apprenticing is the next in importance amongst the endowed charities. The income of this charity, at the period of the inquiry, was £308 per annum, and the charity was to be in future dispensed in premiums of £20 to £25, instead of £15 as formerly. There are various other minor endowments, chiefly dispensed to the poor in bread, clothing, &c., and yielding in all upwards of £70 per annum. The chief streets of the town are disposed on the road from Newmarket to Norwich, and from Lynn to Bottesdale, and there are in them several very handsome houses. The guildhall, erected in the time of Charles II., is a fine old building. The market-house is a commodious edifice covered with cast-iron, and has an iron balustrade in front. The Little Ouse river is here joined by the Thet, a small tributary stream, which appears to have given its name to the town; and a considerable trade is carried on with Lynn, in the export and import of domestic necessities and agricultural produce, by means of their united waters. There is a neat cast-iron bridge over the Ouse, and some wooden bridges over both the streams. The country is open, and the climate is considered remarkably salubrious. On an elevation on the eastern side of the town, there are the remains of a large entrenched camp, which have given to the height the name of the Castle-hill. Thetford is celebrated for its ale, as it was formerly for its fishery of eels, pike, salmon, and others of the finny tribe. Thetford has returned two members to parliament ever since the time of Edward VI. Under the Municipal Act it is governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors, under the usual corporate style; and they have a public income of about £1,000 a year. The Thetford poor-law union comprises 34 parishes, with a population of about 16,000, spread over an area of 180 square miles. — Contains 8,270 acres: 675 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,934: do. in 1851, 4,524: ass^d. prop^y £5,946: poor rates in 1848, THICKHED, EAST RIDING, YORK, in Weldrake parish, on the western bank of the Derwent: 8 miles from York. — Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—A small Benedictine nunnery was built here by Roger Fitz-Roger, temp. Richard I., to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. It was valued 26th Henry VIII. at £20. 18s. 10d. per annum, as Dugdale, £23. 12s. 2d. as Speed, and granted, 33d Henry VIII., to John Aske, in whose family the patronage of foundership had been for many years, it having descended to them from the Hays.

THICKLEY (EAST), DURHAM, a township in St. Andrew-Auckland parish—(which see for access, &c.): 250 miles from London, 4 from Bishop-Auckland, 9 from Darlington. — Money orders issued at Bishop-Auckland: London letters deliv^d 11½ a.m.: post closes 2 p.m. — This was the birth-place of Colonel John Lilburn, a celebrated commander during the civil war, when, in consequence of having been pilloried, whipped, and imprisoned by the Court of the Star Chamber, he embraced the cause of the parliament. For a while he was the friend and secret adviser of Cromwell; but, upon the Protector assuming kingly power, became his open and professed accuser. He, of course, suffered much, and died at the age of thirty-nine, evidently an honest, though, it would appear, violent man. — Contains 260 acres: 5 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 452: poor rates in 1848, £19. 14s.

THIMBLEBY, LINCOLN, a parish in Horncastle soke, union of Horncastle, parts of Lindsey: 130 miles from London (coach road 136), 2 from Horncastle, 9 from Wragby. — Gt. Nor. Barker, 1804: contains 1,800 acres: 58 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 309: ass^d prop^y £1,842: poor rates in 1848, £85. 7s. — The Hall—an elegant modern mansion, standing in a low but pleasant situation, surrounded by very fine and extensive pleasure-grounds—is the seat of Sir Robt. Frankland Russell, Bart., who married Louisa Anne, third daughter of the Right Hon. and Right Rev. Lord George Murray, bishop of St. David's. The honourable baronet, who assumed by sign-manual the surname of Russell in addition to his own of Frankland, is the representative of a family of great antiquity, which has for many centuries been settled in Yorkshire, and which, in all probability, took up their residence there at the time of the Conquest, there being several deeds bearing their name, of very early date, still in existence. One of them, William Frankland, who settled in Hertfordshire, obtained great reputation as a clothworker, and acquired great wealth, the bulk of which he bequeathed to his brother, Richard Frankland, who left Hertfordshire, and went to the old family neighbourhood in Yorkshire, settling at Thirkleby, and marrying Lucy, daughter of Sir Henry Butler of Hatfield, Woodhall, Herts. From them came their grandson, Sir Wm. Frankland, who was created a baronet in 1660, prior to the decease of his father. Of that gentleman the present honourable baronet is a lineal descendant.

THIRLBLY, NORTH RIDING, YORK, a township in Felix-kirk parish: 222 miles from London, 5 from Thirsk, 15 from Boroughbridge. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — Contains 1,230 acres: 24 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 127: ass^d prop^y £803: poor rates in 1848, £51. 6s.

THIRNE. See THURNE.

THIRSK (or THIRSK), NORTH RIDING, YORK, a borough, market town, and parish, in Birdforth wapentake, union of Thirsk: the parish includes the chapels of Carlton-Islebeck or Miniott, Sandhutton, and Sowerby, besides the township of Thirsk: 242 miles from London (coach road 226), 10 from Northallerton, 11 from Ripon. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and Leeds, to Thirsk station: from Derby, through Leeds, &c., 110 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m. and 9½ p.m.: post closes 5.20 p.m. and 8 p.m. The old town of Thirsk is chiefly formed by one long street, at the commencement of which there is a small open place, round which stand a number of the ancient burgrave houses. In addition to these, however, a large number of new houses have of late years been erected. Near these latter are the remains of the ancient castle, which at one time belonged to the powerful family of the Mowbrays; and it was here that Roger de Mowbray commenced his insurrection against Henry II., in consequence of which the castle was dismantled. The church, which is a fine old structure, is situated at the northern extremity of the new town, which is connected with the old town by two small but handsome bridges of stone. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. The several charities yield about £40 per annum. Thirsk is a borough by prescription, and is governed by a bailiff, chosen by the burghers, and sworn in at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. The borough was first represented in parliament in the twenty-third year of Edward I., and returned two members until the passing of the Reform Act, which left it only one. The borough comprises South Kelvington, Thirsk, and Bagby. This is a polling-place for the county, and the petty sessions for the wapentake are held here. The Thirsk poor-law union comprises 40 parishes, with a population of about 12,000 persons, spread over an area of 85 square miles. The living (the Virgin Mary), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Cleveland, and diocese of York, is valued at £40: pres. net income, £137: patron, Archbishop of York: pres. incumbent, William Lindley, 1843: contains 7,520 acres: 820 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,599: do. in 1851, 5,289: ass^d. prop^r. £15,511: poor rates in 1848, £484. 16s. Its situation is extremely pleasant, the gentle eminence on which it stands being surrounded by remarkably pleasing and fertile grounds. The present name is derived from the thorns and bushes which grew in its neighbourhood; but it was anciently called Ankeridge, an appellation which it acquired from the anchorites, who dwelt in the cells of the abbey founded here by Sexulphus, the first abbot of Peterborough, who lived in the time of Etheldreda. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of the place, says — The church consists of a part of a celebrated abbey of anchorites founded here by Sexulph, first abbot of Peterborough, with the consent of Wulphur, king of Mercia, as early as St. Etheldreda's time; and here were a prior and several anchorites, A.D. 870; but this house having been destroyed by the Danes, Ethelwold, bishop of Winchester, A.D. 972, refounded it for Benedictine monks, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The patronage of this abbey was granted by King John, ann. reg. 15 or 16, to Eustace, then bishop of Ely, and his successors. Its possessions were valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £411. 12s. 11d. per ann. Dugd.; £508. 12s. 5d. Speed; great part of which, with the site of the monastery, were given, 3d Edward VI., to John, earl of Bedford. Here was also an hospital for poor persons, under the government of the abbey. This abbey conferred the privilege of a seat in parliament on its superior. Several Roman relics have been found in the neighbourhood. — The living (St. Botolph) is a donative, a peculiar in the diocese of Ely: pres. net income, £220: patron, Duke of Bedford: pres. incumbent, John Wing: contains 17,590 acres: 306 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,159:

About a mile to the westward of the town are the remains of a magnificent priory, which, says Tanner, was founded by William le Gross, Earl of Albemarle and Lord of Holderness, A.D. 1139, and was commended to the patronage of the Blessed Virgin. It was valued, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £594. 17s. 10d. ob. q. per annum, Dugdale; £730. 17s. 2d. ob. Speed. After the suppression of the abbey, King Henry VIII., ann. reg. 33, reserved the greatest part of its possessions for the endowment of the college by him erected at this place for a dean and nineteen prebendaries, to the honour of the holy and undivided Trinity: but this continued but till 1st Edward VI., when it was dissolved, and the site granted in exchange to the bishop of Lincoln. The structure appears to have formed a quadrangle, with high ramparts, surrounded by a deep ditch. The gateway, which formed the western entrance, is still nearly entire; to the east of it are the remains of the Abbey church. — The living (St. Lawrence), a vicarage in the archd^r and diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £5. 18s. 4d.: pres. net income, £123: patron, C. Mr. Allen, in his history of the county, gives the following description of the celebrated natural curiosity in this parish, called Yorda's Cave. "The entrance to this cave is through a rude arched opening, four yards by seven, like the gateway of some ancient castle; which soon opens into an apartment, so spacious and extensive, that, with all the blaze of candles, neither the roof nor the walls can be clearly discerned. No cave in romance—no den of lions, giants, or serpents—nor any supposed haunts of ghosts or fairies, were ever described more dreary or terrific than is this gloomy and dismal cavern. After crossing a little brook, and proceeding 30 or 40 yards further, the high roof and walls are seen distinctly, as well as the curious petrifications hanging therefrom. On the right are several other curiously-incrusted figures; a projecting one is called the Bishop's throne, from its great resemblance to that appendage of a cathedral; another confused mass of incrustated matter bears some resemblance to a large organ. After entering a narrow passage of five or six yards, where the roof is supported by seven pillars, there is only room for one person in breadth, but the height is very considerable. At a small distance hence, a cascade issues from an opening in the rock, and falls four or five yards into a circular apartment, roofed with a fine dome; this apartment some visitants have named the chapter-house. The whole length of this singular cavern is between 50 and 60 yards; its breadth 13 yards, and height 47 feet. The principal part here described lies to the right; but it extends also on the other hand, and unfolds some wonderful closets, called Yorda's bedchamber, Yorda's oven, &c. On the upper side of Yorda's cave is a quarry of black marble, from which elegant monuments, chimney-pieces, slabs, and other ornaments, are dug."—The living (St. Oswald), a vicarage in the diocese of Ripon, is valued at £28. 13s. 1½d.: pres. net income, £99: patron, Dean and Chapter of Worcester: pres. incumbent; Thomas Leach, 1847: contains 8,860 acres: 242 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,138: do. in 1851, 1,309: ass^d. prop^r. £6,725: poor rates in 1848, £383. 19s. Mr. Hunter, in his history of the Deanery of Doncaster, says of Thrybergh—"In the whole economy of Thrybergh there has been no departure from what appears to have been contemplated by our ancestors, as the perfection of one of the minutest subdivisions of our country. It is one manor, one township, one parish. There is one resident lord, with his mansion and adjacent park, and a tenantry living under his patronage; a beautiful little church; a commodious parsonage near adjoining; a resident incumbent, and an unspoiled rectory. There is also a rich and fertile soil; and an easy communication with the two markets of Rotherham and Doncaster. Correspondent to these advantages, there is at Thrybergh the appearance of cleanliness, cheerfulness, and comfort." The living, a rectory in the archd^r and diocese of York, is valued at £12. 11s. 5½d.: pres. net income, £329: patron, J. Fullerton, Esq.: pres. incumbent, A. Thrybergh House, the seat of John Fullerton, Esq., is an imposing mansion, surrounded by an extensive and very pleasing park. Few families in England can boast of such a long unbroken descent as the Fullertons of Ayrshire, of which this gentleman is the representative; not a link being wanting even in the male succession during a period of six centuries. It appears, as the name would seem to intimate, to be of Anglo-Saxon origin, with some mixture of Norman blood. Originally the family was settled in Scotland, and Walter, son of Alan, ancestor of the high-stewards of England, soon after his return obtained grants of the countries of Kyle and Strathgrife, and became the founder of many of the most respectable families who exist there at the present day. From Walter was descended Adam Fullerton, who received a charter from James, high-steward of Scotland, which was renewed in 1371 by King Robert II. Sir Adam Fullerton, grandson of the last-named gentleman, was knighted by David II. before he crossed the border on his expedition into England. Having alienated many of their lands in Scotland, John Fullerton, Esq., the then representative of the family, settled at Thrybergh, being succeeded in the estates in 1847 by the present owner.

Rail. to Winchester, thence 6 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Winchester, &c., 161 miles.---Money orders issued at Alresford: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m.---There is a Roman Catholic chapel in the village, attached to Tichborne House, the seat of Sir Edward Doughty, Bart. This gentleman, who assumed the surname of Doughty in 1826, on succeeding to the estates of the late Mrs. Elizabeth Doughty of Snarford Hall, inherited the baronetcy in 1845, on the death of his brother. The family appears to have been of considerable importance even long before the Norman Conquest, and derived its appellation from the river Itchen, near the source of which they had large possessions. It was denominated De Itchenborne, which, in the course of ages, was modified into Titchborne. The first of whom we have any accredited historical notice is Sir Roger de Ticheburne, Knt., of Ticheburne, who lived in the reign of Henry II., and married Mabel, heiress of Ralph de Lamerston of Lamerston, in the Isle of Wight, by which he acquired that estate. Their grandson, Sir John de Tichborne, was a person of great eminence, represented the county of Southampton during the 10th and 11th of Edward II., and was knight of the shire in the 14th year of that monarch's reign. He was also one of the king's justices itinerant. One of his descendants, Sir Benjamin Ticheborne, Knt., who was sheriff of the county in the last year of Queen Elizabeth, soon as he heard of the death of the Queen, repaired immediately to Winchester, and, without having received any order from the Government, proclaimed, in his capacity of sheriff, the accession of James I. For this important service the new monarch, soon after his arrival in London, created him a baronet, and knighted his four sons, conferring upon him at the same time the castle of Winchester in fee farm. This castle was subsequently held by his son, Sir Richard, against the Parliamentarians under Sir William Waller, and at length was yielded only to the prowess of Cromwell. From that gentleman the present baronet is a lineal descendant.---The living (St. Andrew) is a curacy, annexed to Cheriton rectory: contains 3,060 acres: 64 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 340: poor rates in 1848, £422. 11s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

TICHFIELD WITH CROFTON, HANTS, a parish and market town in Tichfield hund^d, union of Fareham, situated on a small stream that falls into the Southampton water, with which it communicates by a navigable cut: 87 miles from London (coach road 78), 2 from Fareham, 10 from Southampton.---Sou. West. Rail. to Fareham, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Fareham, &c., 175 miles.---Money orders issued at Fareham: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m. and 5½ p.m.: post closes 5 p.m.---The town is well built, consisting chiefly of one street, which runs nearly north and south. It is an active trading place, in consequence of its admirable roadstead for vessels near the mouth of Southampton water. The church, which is a spacious edifice, is spoken of both by Lambard and Tanner. The former says, Peter de la Roche, the jolly bishop of Winchester, in the time of Hen. III., buylded a religious house of Augustines at Seleburne in Hamshire, an hospitale at Portsmouth in the same countrie, and an abbay at Tichfield Hardby: My copie of Mat. Paris hathe Treford, but I think it be mistaken by the error of the wryters. In this abbay Kinges Henry VI. marryed Margaret his Queene. Tanner's account of this abbey is as follows: Peter de Rupibus, bishop of Winchester, having obtained of King Henry III. a grant of this manor, built an abbey here for Premonstratensian canons, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary, A.D. 1231. At the suppression there were an abbot and twelve canons in it, endowed with £249. 16s. 1d. per annum, Dugd.; £280. 19s. 10d. ob. Speed. It was granted, 29th Henry VIII., to Sir Thomas Wriothesley, who built there 'a right stately house.' The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. One of the schools here is endowed with £10. 10s. per annum; the other charities produce £83 per annum. Near the town are the ruins of a mansion, which for a while was the asylum of Charles I. after his escape in 1647 from Hampton Court. A court-baron is held twice a year, and a court-leet annually.---The living (St. Peter), a vicarage, with the curacy of Crofton, in the archd^y of Win-

TICKFORD (or TKEFORD), BUCKINGHAM, in Newport-Pagnell parish, formerly the seat of a monastery, of which Tanner says—This monastery of Cluniac monks was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, subordinate to the abbey of St. Martin Majoris Monasterii, commonly called Marmonstier at Tours in France, to which this manor was given by Fulk, or Fulcadius Painell, in the reign of King William Rufus. It was seized by the king's hands as an alien priory during the wars with France, by King Edward III., but restored, 1^o Henry IV., subject to the priory of the Holy Trinity at York, who presented the priors, A.D. 1475, 1499, and 1501, and was not dissolved till it was granted, with several other small monasteries—17^o Henry VIII.—to Cardinal Wolsey, in order to be settled on one of his two intended colleges at Orford and Ipswich; at which time the spiritualities of this priory were valued at £59. 3s. 4d. per annum, and the temporalities at £67. 13s. 8d.; in the whole, at £126. 17s. per annum. Mr. Willis has a valuation of this house at £97. 13s. 10d. per annum. After the cardinal's fall, this, among other lands of religious houses, was granted to the bishop of Lincoln and other trustees, for the use of the King's college in Oxford, yet it was afterwards resumed by the Crown, and by King James sold to Henry Atkins, M.D.

TICKHILL, WEST RIDING, YORK, a parish, and formerly a market town, in the south division of Strafforth and Tickhill wapentake, union of Doncaster: the parish comprises the townships of Tickhill and Stancill-with-Wellingley and Wilsick: 171 miles from London (coach road 157), 4 from Bawtry, 7 from Doncaster. — Gt. Nor. Rail. to Bawtry, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Swinton, Doncaster, &c., 64 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 6½ a.m.: post closes 6.20 p.m. — The town stands in a valley, through which runs a brook of translucent water, that might almost be taken for a Derbyshire streamlet. It is straggling and irregularly built, but remarkably cheerful in appearance, and covers a large space of ground. It appears once to have been fortified, and there are still the remains of a large castle, built in the Norman style of architecture. The circular keep was demolished in 1646, by order of the parliamentary commissioners, and the rest fell into decay, or was removed, the gateway alone continuing in anything like a fair state of preservation. It was originally built by Roger de Busli, one of William the Conqueror's followers, who also rebuilt or repaired Sheffield Castle. A great part of the grounds within the walls has been converted into orchards and gardens; a walk, pleasingly overhung by pendent foliage, winds to the summit of the mount on which the castle stood, showing, through various openings, delightful views of the pleasure-grounds and the town below, together with the lofty and picturesque trees that skirt the surrounding ditch. What the origin of the name of the Tickhill is cannot now be ascertained, but the best conjecture appears to be that its present appellation is derived from the old term Th-wick-hill, or fortified height, the word wick, signifying just such a mount as that at this place; and Camden says of it—"Tickhill was of such dignity heretofore, that all the manors hereabouts were called the honour of Tickhill, and the wapentake still takes the name, together with that of Strafforth." The church was built in the reign of Richard II., and is a very fine specimen of the ecclesiastical architecture of the 14th century. The interior is very spacious, and most of the windows were formerly filled with painted glass. It contains several interesting monuments, and among them several tombs of merchants who lived shortly after the erection of the fabric. At the west end there is a tower. At a short distance there are the remains of a still more ancient church, which is believed to be the church of Dodesley, as the parish was anciently named. In the castle here, says Tanner, was a royal free chapel, or collegiate church, founded by Queen Eleanor, wife to King Henry II., which, with its four prebends, worth an hundred marks per annum, was given by King John to the canons of the cathedral church at Roan in Normandy. It was afterwards given to the prior and convent of Lenton in Nottinghamshire, and A. D. 1504, to the abbot and convent of St. Peter at Westminster, and, as parcel of their possession, was granted, 6° Edward VI., to Francis, earl of Shrewsbury. Here was also an hospital dedicated to St. Leonard; another hospital, or free chapel, afterwards annexed to the priory of Humberston, and a house of Austin friars. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels in the village. The Maison Dieu, an almshouse for eight poor persons, of ancient foundation, is endowed with £50 a year; the other charities produce about £16 a year, which is distributed in bread and alms to the poor. Tick-hill was formerly celebrated for its malting business, but that has almost altogether ceased. — The living (St. Mary), a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of York, is valued at £7. 2s. 6d.: pres. net income, £261: patron, G. S. Foljambe: pres. incumbent, E. H. Brooksbank, 1819: contains 6,470 acres: 430 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,040: do. in 1851, 2,346: ass^d prop^r £10,517: poor rates in 1848, £763. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1765. — Market day, Friday. Fairs: August 21, and second Friday in October.

TICKNALL, DERBY, a parish in Repton and Gresley hun^d, union of Ashby-de-la-Zouch: 140 miles from London (coach road 123), 8 from Derby, 5 from Ashby-de-la-Zouch. — Nor. West. Rail. to Derby, thence 8 miles: from Derby, by coach, 8 miles. — Money orders issued at Derby: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. — The church, a handsome Gothic edifice, was rebuilt in 1842, principally through the munificence of Sir George Crewe, Bart. It has a nave, chancel, aisles, and a tower with an elegant spire, which is a pleasing object from every part of the surrounding country for several miles. The Wesleyans and Baptists have chapels here. Almshouses for seven decayed housekeepers were founded here in 1770, by C. Harper, Esq.; each of the inmates receives £10 per annum. The other charities produce about £16 per annum. — The living (St. Thomas à Becket), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £26: pres. net income, £250: patron, Sir G. Crewe, Bart.: pres. incumbent, R. Cox, 1838: contains 1,770 acres: 270 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,271: do. in 1851, 1,461: ass^d prop^r £2,064: poor rates in 1848, £502. 10s.

TICKTON, EAST RIDING, YORK, a township in St. John's parish—(which see for access, &c.): 184 miles from London, 2 from Beverley, 10 from Hull. — Money orders issued at Beverley: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 2½ p.m. — Contains 700 acres: 24 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 251. It contains several fine monuments and brasses, especially one of Robert Pursglove, suffragan bishop of Hull and last prior of Gisburne Abbey, who was born and died here. The Wesleyans, Roman Catholics, Independents, and Ranters, have chapels in the town. The free grammar-school for the education of boys was founded in the time of Elizabeth, by Bishop Pursglove, and now possesses an income of about £220 per annum, a fourth part of which is given, by a decree of Chancery, half-yearly, to the poor of the parish. The other charities produce about £12 per annum. Large and handsome national schools have recently been erected here for the education of girls and infants, at a cost of £1,200. Tideswell must evidently have been a place of much importance, but the records of its history are obscure, and the appellation of the place is now traditional, being believed, but without foundation, to be derived from a well that ebbed and flowed in accordance with the tides on the coast. In the old registers of the parish, the name of this place is spelled Tydeswall. The population is chiefly employed in cotton mills and handloom weaving. Tideswell is a polling-place, and contains 138 registered voters. — The living, a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £7. 0s. 7d.: pres. net income, £197: patron, Dean and Chapter of Lichfield: pres. incumbent, J. Kynaston, M.A., 1837: contains 10,950 acres: 500 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,043: do. in 1851, 3,499: ass^d prop^r £9,383: poor rates in 1848, £801. 8s. — Market day, Wednesday. Fairs: March 24, May 15, last Wednesday in July, second Wednesday in September, and October 29. — George Inn. — Crossbrook Hall is the seat of Henry M'Connel, Esq.

TIDMARSH, BEAKE, a parish in Theale hun^d, union of Bradfield, on a branch of the Thames: 42 miles from London (coach road 45), 7 from Reading, 12 from Wallingford. — Gt. West. Rail. to Pangbourne station, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, Reading, &c., 128 miles. — Money orders issued at Reading: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. — The church has a very handsome Norman doorway. — The living, a rectory in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £5. 2s. 6d.: pres. net income, £223: patron, John Hopkins, Esq.: pres. incumbent, Thomas Wintle, 1814: contains 800 acres: 31 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 146: ass^d prop^r £1,190: poor rates in 1848, £17. 1s. Tithes commuted in 1839. — Tidmarsh House is the seat of John Hopkins, Esq.

TIDMINGTON, WORCESTER, a parish in the upper division of Oswaldslow hun^d, union of Shipston-on-Stour, in the above county, but located in Kingdon division and hun^d, county of Warwick: 94 miles from London (coach road 81), 2 from Shipston-on-Stour, 6 from Moreton-in-the-Marsh. — Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Moreton-in-the-Marsh, thence 6 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Worcester to Moreton-in-the-Marsh, 107 miles. — Money orders issued at Shipston: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 3¼ p.m. — The living is a rectory, annexed to that of Shipston-upon-Stour: contains 820 acres: 10 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 70: ass^d prop^r £1,581: poor rates in 1848, £70. 19s. — The Hall is the seat of John Hopkins, Esq.

TIDWORTH (NORTH), WILTS, a parish in Amesbury hun^d, union of Andover: 89 miles from London (coach road 73), 3 from Ludgershall, 8 from Amesbury. — Gt. West. Rail. to Hungerford, thence 18 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Hungerford, &c., 163 miles. — Money orders issued at Marlborough: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. — Some small charities belong to the parish. Chidbury Camp, an ancient remain, occupies the top of an isolated hill, which forms a very conspicuous landmark, and which commands a very extensive and pleasing prospect. To the south there are two ancient banks and ditches, one of which, intersecting the old causeway, leads into an extensive British village, and to a large group of barrows. The whole of these were investigated by Sir Richard Hoare, and some of them were found to contain many articles of singular workmanship. Besides the raised way, several banks and ditches diverge from Chidbury encampment to the east, west, and south. Those which take a southern direction, intersect different portions of West Down-hill and Beacon-hill. The discoveries from the excavations we have noticed elsewhere. — The living, a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Sarum, is valued at £11. 17s. 1d.: pres. net income, £266: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, F. Dyson, 1829: contains 3,120 acres: 67 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 417: ass^d prop^r £1,749: poor rates in 1848, £193. 7s.

TIDWORTH (SOUTH), HANTS, a parish in Andover hun^d, union, and division: 73 miles from London, 15 from Marlborough, 9 from Andover. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — The living, a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £14. 15s. 2d.: pres. net income, £379: patron, T. A. Smith, Esq.: pres. incumbent, F. Dyson, 1846: contains 2,170 acres: 39 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 254: ass^d prop^r £1,766: poor rates in 1848, £87. 7s.

TILBURY (EAST), ESSEX, a parish in Barstable hun^d., union of Orsett, on a creek near the Thames: 24 miles from London (coach road 26), 13 from Brentwood, 4 from Gravesend.---East. Co^r. Rail. to Romford, thence 12 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 156 miles.---Money orders issued at Romford: three posts each way daily.---The church has a nave, north aisle, and chancel, and there was formerly an embattled tower on the south or south-west angle, but it was battered in the time of Charles II. by the Dutch. It was in this parish that the ancient ferry over the Thames was established, and the old Roman road, or Higham causeway, of which some traces still remain, was formed. There is a field here in which there is a horizontal passage into one of the spacious caverns, called Danes' Holes, which are thought to be partly retreats for the Danes, and partly receptacles for the supplies of the British.---The living, a disch^d. vicarage in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £13. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £244: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, W. G. Goodchild, 1845: contains 1,440 acres: 49 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 311: ass^d. prop^r. £2,936: poor rates in 1848, £197. 11s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

TILBURY (WEST), ESSEX, a parish in Barstable hun^d., union of Orsett, on the north side of the Thames: 24 miles from London, 3 from Gray's-Thurrock, 3 from Gravesend.---(For access, &c., see above.)---Money orders issued at Gray's-Thurrock: London letters deliv^d. 10½ a.m.: post closes 2½ p.m.---The church is pleasantly situated on a rising ground, from which there is a wide prospect of the surrounding country; and formerly there was a lofty stone tower, but it fell down, and there is now only a wooden frame and spire. Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—Bede, in his Ecclesiastical History, tells us, that Cedda, bishop of the East Saxons, about A.D. 630, converted the inhabitants of this county to the faith of Christ, built churches in several places, and ordained priests and deacons to assist him in that great work; but especially in the city, which, in the language of the Saxons, is called Ythancester, and also in that which is named Tillaburgh—the first of which places is on the bank of the river Pante, the other on the bank of the Thames—where, gathering a flock of the servants of Christ, he taught them to observe the discipline of a regular life, as far as those rude people were then capable. From hence, Cressy saith, he built monasteries here; and Camden, Norden, and Nevecourt say, he had his episcopal see at West Tilbury. Wharton, in his account of Cedda, amongst the bishops of London, takes no notice of this; and as to Ythancester, it hath been so long swallowed up in the river Pante, or, as it is now called, Frodsham, that there have not been any remains of it for many years; but it is supposed to have been where St. Peter's-on-the-Wall now is, or near it. In 1734, a medicinal spring was discovered here.---The living, a rectory in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £20: pres. net income, £500: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, J. Hargreaves, 1843: contains 1,830 acres: 51 houses:

popⁿ. in 1841, 276: ass^d. prop^r. £2,785: poor rates in 1848, £68. 14s.

TILBURY FORT, ESSEX. It stands on the bank of the Thames, and was originally erected by Henry VIII. as a blockhouse, but was enlarged and made a regular fortification by Charles II. The esplanade is extensive, and the bastions are the largest of any in England. They are formidable obstacles, for they are surrounded by a ditch 180 feet in breadth. On the land side are two small redoubts, or forts, as we should now call them, of brick. But the chief strength of the place lies in being able to lay the whole of the district under water, so that an attack would appear to be impossible.

TILDESLEY-CUM-SHAKERLY, LANCASTER, a chapelry and township in Leigh parish—(which see for access, &c.): 194 miles from London, 11 from Manchester, 2 from Leigh.---Money orders issued at Manchester: London letters deliv^d. 11 a.m.: post closes 4 p.m.---The Methodists and Huntingdonians have places of worship here.---The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Manchester: pres. net income, £135: patron, Lord Lilford: pres. incumbent, Jacob Robson, 1825: contains 2,610 acres: popⁿ. in 1841, 4,718: ass^d. prop^r. £6,744: poor rates in 1848, £856. 18s.

TILEHURST (or TYLEHURST), BERKS, a parish in Reading hun^d., union of Bradfield: 38 miles from London (coach road 42), 3 from Reading, 3 from Theale.---Gt. West. Rail. to Reading, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, Reading, &c., 125 miles.---Money orders issued at Reading: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 9 p.m.---The church contains several remarkably fine crosses and monuments, one of which, to the memory of Sir Peter Vanlore, is peculiarly distinguishable. One of the daily schools here is endowed with £20 per annum. The Wesleyan Methodists and Baptists have chapels in the village.---The living is a rectory and vicarage, with the curacy of Routh, in the diocese of Oxford: patron, Mrs. S. Shephard: pres. incumbent, M. J. Routh: contains 5,400 acres: 348 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 2,147: do. in 1851, 2,469: ass^d. prop^r. £8,979: poor rates in 1848, £965. 17s.---Calcot Park is the seat of Colonel John Blagrove; and there are several other handsome residences in the vicinity.

TILSTOCK, SALOP, an ancient chapelry in the parish of Whitchurch—(which see for access, &c.)—recently allocated as an ecclesiastical district: 163 miles from London, 3 from Whitchurch, 7 from Wem. During the incumbency of the present curate, a new church, and parsonage adjoining, have been erected in a most eligible and beautiful situation. The new church bears the following inscription in front—

"Christ's Church,
Erected Anno Domini
MDCCCXXXV.
From Donations by
The late Earl of Bridgewater."

The parsonage commands a remarkably fine view of Hawkstone, the romantic and beautiful seat of Viscount Hill, the lord-lieutenant of the county. There is also a new national school lately erected in the centre of the village, and the average number of scholars in daily attendance is from 70 to 80, and sometimes almost 100.---The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Salop, and diocese of Lichfield: pres. net income, arising altogether from land, £110, having been augmented by the late Earl of Bridgewater, in whose family the patronage rests; but the presentation is vested in the rectory of Whitchurch: pres. incumbent, Wm. Renton, 1828: popⁿ in 1851, nearly 600.

in 1848, £146. 5s.---Clyffe House is now the seat of Charles Porcher, Esq. It is a remarkably fine structure, built after the designs of B. Ferrey, Esq., in the early Tudor style, surrounded by beautiful grounds, and commands some of the most extensive views in the county. Mr. Porcher is of a family of French extraction, and the only one of the name in England. He derives his descent from Protestants who forsook their country at the revocation of the edict of Nantes, where, on the banks of the Loire, the Counts Porcher of Richebourg, the ancestral line, still exists. Two of this family were ennobled in the French peerage, viz., Stephen Porcher of Joigny, who was, in 1364, raised to the peerage by Charles V., and the branch seated at Richebourg. The family is of very ancient date, tracing their descent up to Simon le Porcher, hereditary grand huntsman to Louis Capet, from whose official duty of slaying the boar, the name is derived. One of the Protestant branches of the Richebourg family fled, with the descendants of many other noble houses, to South Carolina, in America. From him was descended Josias du Pré Porcher, who came to England with his uncle, James du Pré, Esq., who was for some time governor of Fort St. George, at Madras. Josias du Pré Porcher of Winslade House, Devon, sat for many years as member for Old Sarum. That gentleman married Charlotte, second daughter of Admiral Sir William Burnaby, and one of the results of that union was the present proprietor of Clyffe, who is a magistrate for the counties of Dorset, Norfolk, and Suffolk.

is the residence of the Miss Trevors, the present patronesses of the living.

TINSLEY, WEST KIDING, YORK, a parish in the union of Rotherham—(which see for access): 159 miles from London, 3½ from Sheffield, 2½ from Rotherham.—Money orders issued at Rotherham: London letters deliv^d. here from Brightside post-office at 10 a.m.—There is a canal from this place to Rotherham and to Sheffield, passing the Tinsley Park coal-mines, which are now occupied and wrought by Benjamin Huntsman, Esq. The turnpike road between these towns also passes through the village. Many years ago, the church, which is an ancient one, having no minister, its emoluments being then so small—having been taken away for the most part in the reign of Henry VIII.—fell into a dilapidated state, and the people therefore went down to Rotherham to worship, and by so doing helped to maintain the fabric there; and, notwithstanding the irregularity, have continued to pay a small annual sum towards the repairs of Rotherham church, as well as to maintain their own, which was put into a sufficient state of repair, and supplied with a minister, after some years of intermission, in 1711. The parochial school is endowed with £10 per annum, by Earl Fitzwilliam.—The living, a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of York, is valued at £29. 18s.: pres. net income, £124: patron, Earl Fitzwilliam, to whom, a few acres excepted, the whole parish belongs: pres. incumbent, John Richardson, 1846: contains 1,570 acres: 117 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 580: ass^d. prop^y. £16,214: poor rates in 1848, £168. 13s.

TINTAGELL AND BOSSINEY, CORNWALL, a parish and disfranchised borough in Lesnewth hund^d, union of Camelford: 257 miles from London (coach road 233), 6 from Camelford, 1 from Bossiney.—Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Plymouth, thence 13 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 271 miles.—Money orders issued at Camelford: London letters deliv^d. 1½ p.m.: post closes 11 a.m.—The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in the village. Bossiney was erected into a borough by Richard, Earl of Cornwall, and returned two members to parliament from the 7th year of Edward VI. to the year 1832, when it was disfranchised by the Reform Act. This is supposed to be the birth-place of the celebrated King Arthur, who, with his knights, feasted at the round table, and did such wonderful exploits. At any rate, at a very early period, a strong castle was erected here, the ruins of which are very extensive, and occupy a high ridge of hill promontory, that overhangs the sea with a dark and fearful acclivity. Leland, in speaking of this place, says—This castelle hath bene a marvelous strong and notable fortres, and almost nru loci inexpugnabile, especially for the dungeon, that is on a great high terrible cragge, environed with the se, but having a draw bridge from the residew of the castelle unto it. There is yet a chapel standing withyn this dungeon of S. Ultte, alias Ulianne. Shepe now fede within the dungeon. The residew of the buildinges of the castel be sore wetherbeten an yn ruine, but it hath bene a large thinge. In another place he says—The castel had been lykhod three wardes, whereof two be woren away with gulfing yn the se: withoute the isle renneth alonly a gate howse, a walle, and a fals braye dyged and walled. In the isle remayne old walles, and yn the est parte of the same, the ground beyng lower, remayneth a walle embattled, and men alyce saw ther yn a postern, a dore of yren. There is in the isle a pretty chapel, with a tumb on the left side. Mr. Howitt, after giving a very graphic account of the ruins, cites Warton's description of it in his "Grave of King Arthur."

*"O'er Cornwall's cliffs the tempest roared,
High the screaming sea-mew soared;
On Tintagel's topmost tower
Darksome fell the sleety shower;
Round the rough castle shrilly sung
The whirling blast, and wildly flung
On each tall rampart's thundering side
The surges of the tumbling tide."*

"Yes!" he continues, "you may well imagine it to have been a 'rough castle' of a very ancient day; and yet you may as readily imagine it, too, in its first estate—in its majestic situation, with its walls of fresh silvery stone, with all its ample towers and halls, courts and ramparts, offices and gardens, to have stood a stately object of barbaric splendour." After the Norman Conquest, this castle occasionally became the dwelling of royalty, and David, Prince of Wales, made it for a time his residence during his rebellion, in 1245, against Henry III.—The living (St. Simphorian), a vicarage in the archd^y of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £8. 11s. 3d.: pres. net income, £220: patron, Dean and Chapter of Windsor: pres. incumbent, Robert S. Bree, 1835: contains 3,960 acres: 194 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,185: do. in 1851, 1,368: ass^d. prop^y. £3,674: poor rates in 1848, £305. 8s.—Fair, at Traverne, first Monday after October 10.

TINTERNE ABBEY, MONMOUTH, a celebrated ruin in Chapelhill parish.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 4 p.m.—Tintern Abbey is situated on the western bank of the river Wye, and justly esteemed one of the most picturesque objects in the country. It was at one time a Cistercian abbey, founded in 1131, by Walter de Clare, grandson of William the Conqueror, who had given him Wollaston and Tuderham, and all the manors he could conquer from the Welsh. This Walter, dying without issue, was succeeded by his brother Robert, Earl Strongbowe, Earl of Pembroke, whose grandson took possession of Leinster in Ireland. It subsequently passed through several noble families, but does not appear to have attained any great eminence in Roman Catholic times. At the dissolution, it had a revenue of £132. 1s. 4d. per annum, and the site was granted, in the 28th year of Henry VIII., to Henry, Earl of Worcester, ancestor of the present Duke of Beaufort, whose property it now is. The church was erected some time after the monastery; and, according to William of Worcester, the monks celebrated mass in it, for the first time, in October 1268, but it is very probable that it was not finished till the beginning of the 14th century. Archdeacon Cox, always a good topographer, in his historical tour through Hampshire, aided by his able coadjutor, Sir R. C. Hoare, Bart., who illustrated the book, has given so admirable a description of this celebrated ruin, that we are tempted to extract the chief portions of it. After speaking of their previous proceedings, he says—"We disembarked about half a mile above the village of Tinterne, and followed the sinuous course of the Wye. As we advanced to the village, we passed some picturesque ruins hanging over the edge of the water, which are supposed to have formed part of the abbot's villa, and other buildings occupied by the monks; some of these remains are converted into dwellings and cottages, others are interspersed among the iron-foundries and habitations. The first appearance of the celebrated remains of the abbey church did not equal my expectations, as they are half concealed by mean buildings, and the triangular shape of the gable-ends has a formal appearance. After passing a miserable row of cottages, and forcing our way through a crowd of importunate beggars, we stopped to examine the rich architecture of the west front; but the door being suddenly opened, the inside perspective of the church called forth an instantaneous burst of admiration, and filled me with delight, such as I scarcely ever before experienced on a similar occasion. The eye passes rapidly along a range of elegant Gothic pillars, and, glancing under the sublime arches which supported the tower, fixes itself on the splendid relics of the eastern window, the grand termination of the choir. The church was constructed in the shape of a cathedral, and is an excellent specimen of Gothic architecture in its greatest purity. The roof is fallen in, and the whole ruin open to the sky, but the shell is entire; all the pillars are standing except those which divided the nave from the northern aisle, and their situation is marked by the remains of the bases. The four lofty arches which supported the tower spring high in the air, reduced to narrow rims of stone, yet still preserving their original form. The arches and pillars of the choir and transept are complete; the shapes of all the windows may be still discriminated, and the frame of the west window is in perfect preservation; the design of the tracery is extremely elegant, and when decorated with painted glass, must have produced a fine effect, the abbey presenting one of the most picturesque objects that can be conceived from the river and the surrounding country."

TINTERNE-PARVA, MONMOUTH, a parish in the upper division of Ragland hund⁴, union of Chepstow: 137 miles from London, 5 from Chepstow, 8 from Monmouth. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) TIPTREE, ESSEX, in Great Braxted parish.—

Here, says Tanner, was a priory of Black canons, dedicated to St. Nicholas, to which Ralph de Munchensi, and Albreda his wife, were great benefactors, temp. Edward I. It was one of those small monasteries which were dissolved by Cardinal Wolsey, 17th Henry VIII., at which time Anthony Darcey claimed to be founder, and it was valued only at £22. 16s. 4d. per annum, as in Speed, viz., the spiritualities £4, and the temporalities £18. 16s. 4d. It was, after the forfeiture of the Cardinal, granted, with Stanesgate, 24th Henry VIII., in exchange to the hospitaliers.

TIRMYNECH (OR THE MONK'S LAND), MONTGOMERY, a township in Guilsfield parish—(which see for access, &c.): 3 miles from Welshpool, 1 from Guilsfield. —(Returns with the parish.)

TISBURY, WILTS, a parish in Dunworth hund^d, union of Tisbury, containing the tithings of Chicksgrove and Staple: 109 miles from London (coach road 97), 4 from Hindon, 7 from Shaftesbury. —Sou. West. Rail. through Bishopstoke to Salisbury, thence 13 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Salisbury, &c., 202 miles. —Money orders issued at Hindon: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 5.10 p.m. —The church is an ancient and spacious structure, with a nave and chancel, and a square tower that springs from arches supported from clustered columns. The roof is of carved decorated wood-work, like that of Westminster Hall, and the body of the edifice is enriched by stone mullions, the whole of the ornaments rendering the edifice a very fine specimen of the pointed style of architecture. It contains several monuments of the family of Arundel of Wardour. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of the place, says—Wintra, abbot of Tiselbury, in the kingdom of the West Saxons, is mentioned as flourishing about the year 720, in the life of St. Boniface. King Ethelred gave to the abbey of Shaftesbury "xx. mancas sillo in loco, qui noto Æt. Tissebri vocatus vocamine sitas."

Wardour Castle, in this vicinity, is a magnificent structure, occupied by the Arundel family. It stands on an eminence, has splendid views of the country, and contains numerous suites of apartments, many of which are very superbly furnished. Adjoining it, and, indeed, forming part of the castle, there is a very beautiful Roman Catholic chapel, which is richly fitted up, and contains a series of paintings. (For his lordship's genealogy, see his other seat at IREHAM.) Close by are the ruins of old Wardour Castle, which at one time was an extensive and important fortress. It was sold during the civil war for the king, and obstinately defended by Lady Blanch Arundel; but the Parliamentarians at last took it, and they were only dislodged by Lord Arundel undermining them, and blowing up the building with gunpowder. By that means it was entirely dismantled, and has never since that time been repaired. The Wesleyan Methodists have chapels in the village. The Tisbury poor-law union comprises twenty parishes, with a population of about 10,000 persons, spread over an area of sixty-six square miles. —The living (St. John the Baptist), a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Sarum, is valued at £18. 10s. 10d.: pres. net income, £306: patron, Lord Arundel: pres. incumbent, Simon Webber, 1826: contains 7,600 acres: 405 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,714: do. in 1851, 1,971: ass^d prop^y £13,409: poor rates in 1848, £1,266. 3s.

TISSINGTON, DERBY, a parish in Wirksworth wapentake: 157 miles from London (coach road 143), 4 from Ashborne, 8 from Wirksworth. —Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and Belper, to Brassington station, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Belper, &c., 25 miles. —Money orders issued at Ashborne: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. —The church is a small old building in the Norman style. The charities produce about £30 per annum. There are several springs in the village, connected with which there is a curious olden custom, believed to be of Roman origin, which is thus described by Rhodes in his Peak Scenery of Derbyshire:—"An ancient custom still prevails in the village of Tissington, to which, indeed, it appears to be confined, for I have not met with anything of a similar description in any other part of Derbyshire. It is denominated 'Well-flowering,' and Holy Thursday is devoted to the rites and ceremonies of this elegant custom. This day is regarded as a festival, and all the wells in the place, five in number, are decorated with wreaths and garlands of newly-gathered flowers, disposed in various devices. Sometimes boards are used, which are cut into the figure intended to be represented, and covered with moist clay, into which the stems of the flowers are inserted to preserve their freshness: and they are so arranged as to form a beautiful mosaic work, often tasteful in design and vivid in colouring. The boards thus adorned are so placed in the spring, that the water appears to issue from amongst beds of flowers. On this occasion the villagers put on their best attire, and open their houses to their friends. There is a service at the church, where a sermon is preached; afterwards a procession takes place, and the wells are visited in succession; the psalms for the day, the epistle, and gospel, are read, one at each well; and the whole concludes with a hymn, which is sung by the church-singers, accompanied by a band of music. After this the people separate, and the remainder of the day is spent in holiday pastimes."—The living (St. Mary) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Derby, and diocese of Lichfield: pres. net income, £97: patron, Sir H. Fitzherbert: pres. incumbent, William Alderson, 1811: contains 2,310 acres: 69 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 427: ass^d. prop^r £5,450: poor rates in 1848, £106. 1s.—Tissington Hall, a fine old mansion, surrounded by a beautiful park, is the seat of Sir Henry Fitzherbert, Bart. The name of this eminent family denotes its origin as having been founded by one of the attendants of William the Norman, and which has been seated in Derbyshire ever since the Conquest. The first of whom we have any authentic record is William Fitzherbert, Esq., an eminent barrister, who settled at Tissington, and was recorder of Derby. The grandson of that gentleman was created a baronet in 1783, and of him who succeeded as second baronet in 1798, the present baronet was the nephew.

TIVERTON, DEVON, a parish, borough, and market town, in Tiverton hun^d: 184 miles from London (coach road 165), 22 from Taunton, 14 from Exeter. —Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol to Tiverton station: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 198 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. —This is considered one of the most considerable places in the county; is of great antiquity, and was known as a village as early as the year 870, under the name of Tayford. It was then a village, but about two centuries ago became of considerable importance as a manufacturing town, doubling its population in the short period of thirty years. It suffered, however, repeatedly from fires, owing to most of the houses being roofed with thatch—in one of which calamities that occurred, in 1612, no less than 600 houses were destroyed. The property consumed on these occasions was immense, and the inhabitants became utterly impoverished. It suffered also by a terrible flood and a dreadful storm. In consequence of one of the fires which occurred in 1731, nearly 300 houses were burnt, and upwards of £150,000 of property consumed. Warned by this last misfortune, the inhabitants obtained an act, obliging the builder of every house to roof it with slate or lead, while, under its authority, the streets were widened, and many other salutary regulations were instituted. Tiverton now consists of four principal streets, and is about a mile in length, and another in breadth, lying on the slope of a hill rising towards the north, on a peninsula between the junction of the river Lymar with the Exe, having bridges across both streams, along the banks of which, numerous villas and other habitations have been erected. On an eminence to the west of the town are the remains of the very ancient Castle of Tiverton, which was garrisoned during the great civil war by the partisans of Charles I., but was taken and dismantled by the parliamentarians under Sir Thomas Fairfax. The town is spacious. The market-house, a quadrangular edifice, is very commodious, and the inhabitants are fully supplied with all the means for domestic comfort and social enjoyment. The parish of Tiverton is a rectory in the archd^y. and diocese of Exeter, divided into four portions or prebends. Clare portion is rated at £27; gross income, £574; rent-charge, awarded the rector in lieu of tithes, £565. Pitt portion, with the curacy of Cove, is rated at £36; gross income, £875; rent-charge, awarded the rector in lieu of tithes, £850. Tidcombe portion is rated at £27; gross income, £900. These three are in the patronage of the Earl of Harrowby, Sir W. Carew, the heirs of Sir R. Vyvyan, and the heirs of the Rev. W. Spurway. Priors portion is rated at £10; no return: patron, King's College, Cambridge. The church of St. Peter, which is served by the four portionists, who are responsible by turns for all parochial duties, is a very handsome Gothic edifice, of tolerably uniform style, though the work of different ages. It has a nave and side aisles, with a tower nearly 100 feet in height; there are numerous monuments in the interior. A church or chapel, dedicated to St. George, was founded in 1714, but not finished till 1730. It was made a perpetual curacy, with a salary of £60 per annum, to be paid in portions of £15 each, to the portionists of Clare, Pitt, and Tidcombe, and to the curate of Priors portion, for officiating monthly, each after service at the old church. An Independent and a Baptist church were formed here in 1687; and a Wesleyan Methodist in 1779. Here is also a Roman Catholic chapel. Tiverton is the centre of a very extensive district, and therefore enjoys a large domestic trade; but it is also a place of considerable manufacturing importance, having long been noted for its serges, druggetts, and other woollen goods; while, in addition to these, the manufacture of lace from the Nottingham machines has of late years been introduced, and upon which from 1,200 to 1,500 persons are employed. The free grammar-school was founded and endowed in the 16th century by Peter Blundell, a rich clothier in the town, who also left £2,000 for the support of six students at either of the universities. He also gave £20 a year to be spent in apprenticing fees. To his, other benefactions were added by benevolent individuals, so the income of these accumulated charities now amounts to about £670 a year, which is under the guardianship of 27 trustees. The free English school was founded in 1611 by R. Comyn, Esq., and now has an income of about £105 a year. The charity-school has an endowment which produces £298 a year. All these institutions are very largely attended. Three other schools have benefactions of minor importance. Besides these, the endowed charitable institutions are very important, and have the benefit of incomes amounting to several hundreds a year, but are too numerous to detail. Tiverton has received several charters, and under the Municipal Act its old parochial boundaries have been defined for its present extent. A commission of the peace has been granted, and the borough is now divided into three wards, governed by six aldermen and eighteen councillors, under the usual corporate style. The Tiverton poor-law union comprises 27 parishes, with a population of 32,000 persons, spread over an area of 171 square miles. — Contains 16,790 acres: 1,874 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 10,040: do. in 1851, 11,546: ass^d. prop^r. £14,011: poor rates in 1848, £4,974. 13s. — Market day, Tuesday. Most of the town, however, is built upon the strand, the houses, of highly respectable appearance, being chiefly adapted for the accommodation of visitors of the middle and higher classes of society, by whom Torquay is largely frequented. The place is open to the south, and protected from the northerly winds by the hills by which it is surrounded. Of course all the appliances required by such sojourners, such as baths, libraries, reading-rooms, news-rooms, with other places of recreation, have been richly provided, and, with the salubrity of its climate, have made it a favourite residence, not only in summer, but in winter also. Two commodious piers have been erected during the present century, and there is a constant communication with ports along the coast. There are two Episcopalian chapels here, and the Roman Catholics, Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, and other Dissenters, have places of worship in the town. The Roman Catholic chapel occupies the site of the old Tor Abbey, a magnificent establishment, founded and endowed by William de Brever, in the reign of King John. — The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Totness, and diocese of Exeter—(See TOR-MOHAM.) — Market days, Tuesday and Friday. TORRINGTON (LITTLE), DEVON, a parish in Shebbear hun^d, union of Torrington: 196 miles from London, 2 from Torrington, 9 from Hatherleigh. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — At Taddyport, in this parish, which, as stated in the preceding article, is connected with Great Torrington, there is an hospital and a chapel for the poor of both parishes. The town consists chiefly of one long street, with others of less importance diverging from it on both sides. A castle was built here in 1340 by Richard de Merton, the site of which occupied the top of a lofty cliff, which is now used as a bowling-green. During the great civil war, the parliamentarians were defeated here by Colonel Digby in 1643, and about three years afterwards the royalists shared a similar fate from their opponents under Fairfax. After the victory, a thanksgiving sermon was preached, when a terrible accident occurred—not less than 80 barrels of gunpowder being exploded in the church when it was occupied by 200 prisoners, all of whom, with their guards, perished, and the edifice was destroyed. The body of the church was, however, rebuilt in 1651, and in 1830 the old tower was pulled down, and a new one with a spire was erected in its stead. The Blue-coat school has an income of about £58 a year. Other charities produce about £35 per annum, exclusive of the money derived from the town lands, amounting to about £114 per annum, most of which is applied to parochial purposes. Torrington has received several charters, and it was formerly a parliamentary borough, but was relieved from the duty of sending a member to parliament in 1368. Most of the inhabitants are engaged in the stone trade. This is a polling-place for the northern division of the county. The noble family of Byng derives its title from this place. The living, a rectory in the archd^y of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £14. 18s. 11½d.: pres. net income, £397: patron, Lord Rolle and others: pres. incumbent, Peter Glubb, 1803: contains 4,118 acres: 111 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 588: do. in 1851, 620: ass^d prop^r £2,927: poor rates in 1848, £246. 2s.

TOTHILL-FIELDS, a district in St. John's parish, Westminster, formerly a waste, only presenting a few straggling cottages, and having some monastic institutions; but now occupied by many metropolitan streets, the houses of parliament, and other important establishments. Lambard, in speaking of this place, says—Totehyll, Touthyl, in lib. legum. A large field adjoining to Westminster-abbay, and, before the statut of restraint, reputed within the limites of the sanctuarie of the same house. The place, by reason of the largeness and dry ground, hath served for the most part to decyde the weagers of batteil in, and suche other combattes also as have bene granted by the princes, besides the ordinarie judgment of law; for suche as have proceeded by ordinarie award in law, our bookes, 41 Edw. III., 9 Hen. IV., 21 Hen. VI., and suche others, may give example abundantly. And for thothers permitted by the princes, I will refer you to Halle's hystorie: We have mention in our bookes of law, that execution hath bene done in this place against necromancers or sorcerers, by burninge suche instrumentes as they used in that their science; for 45 Edward III. a fellowe was taken practisinge with a dead man's heade (which doinge our law bookes terme sorcerie, whereas it is necromancie indeed; for sorcery consisteth in lottes, and not in dead bodies), and brought to the barre at the kinge's benche, where, after abjuratioun of his art, his trinkets weare taken from him, carried to Tothyl, and burned before his face. Not much unlike is that also which Hoveden reapierteth of a chaplein to Geffery tharchebishop of Yorke, called Raulf Wigtofte, which in the tyme of Richard I. had provided at Rome a gyrdle and a ringe cunningly intoxicated, whearwith he ment to have dispatched Symon the deane of Yorke and others; but his messenger was intercepted, and his gyrdle and ringe burned at this place before the people. In the tyme of Kinge Edw. I. the ryver of Thamise swelled so farre over his boundes, that it overflowed al Tothyll, as Mat. of West. reporteth.

TOTLEY, DERNY, a township in Dronfield parish—(which see for access, &c.): 163 miles from London, 8 from Chesterfield, 6 from Sheffield. —Money orders issued at Chesterfield: London letters deliv^d. 10 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. —One of the schools here is endowed with £10 per annum.

TOTNESS, DEVON, a parish, borough, and market town, in Coleridge hun^d, union of Totness, situated on the river Dart: 220 miles from London (coach road 190), 9 from Torquay, 22 from Plymouth. —Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Totness station: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 234 miles. —Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 8¹/₂ a.m.: post closes 6.20 p.m. —The situation of the town is one of remarkable beauty. Seated on the banks of the Dart, which here runs with all the impetuosity and the translucency also of a mountain torrent, over which there is a stone bridge, it is surrounded by lofty and acclivitous hills of that peculiar character of boldness and verdure, which render the county of Devon so delightful. On the descent of one of these hills it principally stands, many of the terraces surmounting the brow, and commanding most extensive and diversified views of the surrounding country. The main street, which is more than a mile long, communicates with the suburb of Bridgetown. Another street runs nearly parallel, and others intersect them at right angles. Totness is one of the most ancient towns in England, and with its gable-ended houses, projecting stories, and over-hanging roofs, in the older places of the town, present a series of picturesque objects admirably adapted for the novelist and the painter, and especially for the enjoyment of the archæologist, and the student of old English life. In the lower part of the town, the mind and hand of refinement and improvement have of late years become evident, and few places in the country have made greater advances than this. The church, which was rebuilt in the 15th century, is a handsome and spacious structure, having a tower at the west end, and contains a beautiful stone screen, and a striking Grecian altar-piece. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—Here was an alien priory, cell to the abbey of St. Sergius and St. Bathus at Angiers, to which the church of St. Mary here, and several other lands, were given, by Joh. I fil. Aluredi, temp. Will. Conq. The monks here were of the Cluniac or Benedictine order, and were not dissolved temp. Henry V., but continued till the general suppression, when the yearly value of this priory—which consisted of about six religious—was rated at £24. 9s. 2d. ob. Dugd.; £124. 10s. 2d. ob. Speed. The site of it was granted, 33^d Henry VIII., to Katherine Champerton and others. Here were also an hospital and a Lazar-house. The Independents, Wesleyans, and Unitarians, all have places of worship here. The free grammar-school, which was founded in 1554, was endowed with £111. 10s. per annum. Some other schools have small endowments, and the remaining charities produce about £120 a year. Totness was first incorporated by King John, and was afterwards favoured by several subsequent sovereigns. Under the Municipal Act, the manor of Bridgetown has been included in the boundaries of the borough, and it is now governed by four aldermen and twelve common councillors. It has returned two members to parliament ever since the 33d of Edward I.; formerly the franchise was in the corporation, now it is enjoyed by all the inhabitants who have a sufficient qualification. The poor-law commissioners have erected a workhouse here, which is capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Totness poor-law union comprises 28 parishes, with a population of about 32,500 persons, spread over an area of 143 square miles. The living (St. Mary), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y of Totness, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £12. 8s. 9d.: pres. net income, £200: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, J. W. Burrough, 1838: contains 1,170 acres: 375 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,849: do. in 1851, 4,449: ass^d prop^r £9,268.—Market day, Saturday. TOTTENHAM, MIDDLESEX, a parish in Edmon-ton hun^d and union: it comprises High-Cross, Lower, Middle, and Wood-Green wards: 8 miles from London (coach road 6), 5 from Highgate, 5 from Enfield.—Nor. and East. Co^a Rail. to Tottenham station: from Derby, through London, &c., 140 miles.—Money orders issued at Highgate: five posts daily.—The village consists chiefly of one long street, and is nearly united to London by the range of hamlets, terraces, and detached dwellings, which line the road to Ware and Hertford. The town, for so it may be called, is lighted with gas, and has all the appearance of, and possesses all the appliances for, the residence of a highly respectable community. At a little distance from the high road there is a stately mansion, called Bruce Castle, erected in the 17th century, on the site of an ancient fortress, which was visited by Henry VIII. and Queen Elizabeth; and which was, at one time, in the possession of Robert Bruce, father of Robert, the heroic king of Scotland. The church, which is almost surrounded by the rivulet termed Mosel, that rises on Muswell hill, is an ancient edifice in the pointed style, with a square embattled tower, picturesquely mantled with ivy. Trinity, an elegant structure, built in 1830 at a cost of £5,000, is also in the pointed style. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyans, Society of Friends, and Roman Catholics, all have chapels here. The grammar-school, founded in 1685 by Mr. N. Reynardson, and subsequently largely endowed by the Duchess of Somerset, has an income of about £133 a year. The Blue-coat girl's school is endowed with £66 per annum, and the Green-coat girl's school with £28 per annum. Mr. Reynardson also founded an almshouse in 1685, which now has an income of £130. 17s. 8d. per annum. A similar establishment was founded by Balthasar Sanches, a Spaniard, who came to England with Philip of Spain as his confectioner, and was the first person who exercised that trade in London; its income is now about £62 a year: the other charities produce about £226 per annum. Some cotton and silk are manufactured here. From the agreeability of the place, and its vicinity to London, Tottenham has become the residence of a great number of the higher classes of society.—The living (All Saints), a vicarage in the archd^y of Middlesex, and diocese of London, is valued at £14: pres. net income, £920: patron, Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, London: pres. incumbent, T. TOWCESTER, NORTHAMPTON, a parish and market town in the hun^d and union of Towcester, on the small river Tow, and the Roman road called Watling Street: the parish comprises the hamlets of Caldicott, Handley, and Wood-Burcott: 66 miles from London (coach road 60), 8 from Northampton, 12 from Brackley. — Nor. West. Rail. to Blisworth station, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Rugby to Roade, &c., 78 miles. — Money orders issued here. — This place, anciently called Tosseter, is of very considerable antiquity, and in the time of the Saxons was stoutly fortified. A few remains of its fortifications may be traced on the north-west. The town consists principally of one long street, being a thoroughfare on the old coach road from London to Chester and Holyhead. Most of the houses are well built, and there are several good inns in the place. Most of the inhabitants are engaged in the manufacture of boots, shoes, and bobbin-lace. The church, which is an interesting structure, was built in the eleventh century, and was once under the ministry of the priest who afterwards became Pope Boniface. Tanner, in speaking of it, says—A college or chantry founded here, temp. Henry VI., by William Sponne, D.D., and rector of Towcester, was valued at the dissolution at £19. 6s. 8d. per annum, as Dugd. and Speed. This college and a messuage belonging to it w. re granted, 4th Edward VI., to Richard Hybourne and William Dalby, who sold them to the feoffees of Archdeacon Sponne's will, by whom they have been converted into a grammar-school and schoolmaster's house. The grammar-school was founded in 1552 by the trustees of Archdeacon Sponne, who was also one of the incumbents of the place. Its present income is about £50 a year. Three almshouses here have an income of £50 a year. The other charities produce about £100 per annum. VOL. III.

The Earl of Warwick, the king-maker, as he was called, was commander-in-chief on the side of Edward. Hardly less than 37,000 men perished, and the river Wharf was crimsoned for miles with the blood of the victims.

"England had long been mad, and scarr'd herself;
The brother blindly shed the brother's blood,
The father rashly slaughtered his own son,
The son, compell'd, was butcher to the sire;
All this divided York and Lancaster, Divided in their dire division."

The king, Henry VI., and his brave-spirited queen, Margaret, on hearing the disastrous result, retired to Scotland, while Edward, leaving York, was crowned on the 29th of July following. —Contains 1,360 acres: 22 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 146: ass^d prop^r £1,037: poor rates in 1848, £94. 1s.

The mineral products of the neighbourhood having proved remarkably productive, it has now risen into the dignity of a market town. Railroads have been constructed in various directions, and the inhabitants are generally actively and profitably occupied. A new church, in the early Norman style, has been erected by the ecclesiastical commissioners, at an expense of about £3,000; and there are two Independent, three Baptist, and several Calvinistic and Wesleyan chapels in the place. — Fair, Nov. 19. — Bankers: Branch of Monmouthshire and Glamorganshire Banking Co. — draw on London Joint Stock Bank. — The Hall, a fine domain, is the seat of Sir Charles Morgan Robinson, Bart., who derives his descent from Llwellyn-ap-Ivor, Lord of Clere and Gwyn, in Carmarthenshire, who married Anghurad, a descendant of Rhys, Prince of Wales, and daughter of Sir Morgan Meredith, Lord of Tredegar, and thus acquired the Tredegar estates. From them was descended, through a long line of distinguished ancestry, Dr. Charles Gould, a distinguished civilian, who, having been appointed judge-advocate, judge-marshal of the forces, and sworn of the privy council, was created a baronet in 1792. In this honour he was succeeded by his son Charles, who, in compliance with his father's will, assumed the name of Morgan. That gentleman represented the county of Brecon in three parliaments, receiving, on his retirement, the unanimous thanks of his constituents. Of him the present baronet, who came to the title in 1846, is the grandson.

Rail. through Rugby, Tamworth, and Stone, to Trentham station: from Derby, through Burton, Tamworth, &c., 65 miles. — Money orders issued at Newcastle: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. — The church, which is a fine Gothic building with a tower, was originally part of a priory, founded or rather refounded in the 12th century. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of Trentham, says—There was an ancient nunnery, whereof St. Werburgh was, by her brother King Ethelred, appointed abbess, and here she died, A.D. 683. Of this monastery nothing more occurs till the restoration of it by Randal, second earl of Chester, in the latter part of the reign of King Henry I. for canons of the order of St. Austin. It was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary and All Saints; had, about the time of the dissolution, seven religious, and was then endowed with £121. 3s. 2d. per annum in the whole, but the clear value was only £106. 3s. 10d. as in Dugd. The site was granted, 20th Henry VIII., to Charles, Duke of Suffolk. The village, which stands on the eastern bank of the river from which it derives its name, is well built, and enjoys the advantage of a handsome inn. One of the schools here was endowed by Lady Catherine Leveson with the interest of £400. The same noble lady also left an annuity of £30 a year, for clothing and maintaining three poor widows, and £20 a year for apprenticing two poor children. The inhabitants are principally employed in the making of bricks from clay obtained in the neighbourhood. — The living (St. Mary) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield: pres. net income, £113: patron, Duke of Sutherland: pres. incumbent, E. J. Edwards: contains 6,900 acres: 435 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 2,567: do. in 1851, 2,965: ass^d. prop^r. £11,909: poor rates in 1848, £1,475. 17s. — Trentham Hall, the seat of the Duke of Sutherland, has within these late years been very much improved. An entrance, in the form of a crescent, has been added, and a fine conservatory. A spacious esplanade, and a terrace, have been placed before the southern entrance; and a new wing has been added to the west, from which a Venetian tower rises, with a beautiful arcade, reaching to the shrubbery and the river. The apartments of this mansion are of noble dimensions, furnished and embellished with works in every branch of art. The grounds, which are extensive, and most pleasingly laid out, contain a lake of ninety acres in extent. On a lofty height, richly timbered, stands the monument and colossal statue of the late duke. His Grace, George Granville Sutherland Leveson Gower, K.G., Duke of Sutherland, Marquis of Stafford, Earl Gower, Viscount Trentham, and Baron Gower, in the peerage of England, Earl of Sutherland, and Baron of Strathnaver, in that of Scotland, is the representative of a family which traces its pedigree up to the times before the Norman Conquest; but the first of whom we have any historical record is Sir John Gower, summoned as a person of note, towards the end of the eleventh century, to attend a force then marching against the Scots. From him was descended, Sir William Leveson Gower, maternally descended from the Levesons, a very ancient family. This gentleman having been adopted by his uncle, Sir Richard Leveson, K.B., of Trentham, inherited the whole of his estates. The son of Sir William, Sir John Leveson Gower, was, in 1702, elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Gower of Stittenham. His lordship married Catherine, daughter of John, first duke of Rutland, was constituted lord privy seal, sworn of the privy council, and having been twice one of the lords-justices during the king's absence from the realm, was created Viscount Trentham of Trentham, in the county of Stafford, and Earl Gower. He married secondly, in 1748, Lady Louisa Egerton, daughter and eventually co-heir of Scroop, first duke of Bridgewater, a descendant of Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, and Mary Queen Dowager of France, and through whom the present duke is entitled to quarter the royal arms with his own. His lordship having filled several high offices of state, was installed a K.G., and in 1786 created Marquis of Stafford. His son (then Viscount Trentham), in 1785, married Elizabeth, Countess of Sutherland and Baroness of Strathnaver in her own right, and daughter of William, seventeenth earl of Sutherland, and the holder of one of the most ancient peerages in Europe. He succeeded his father as Marquis of Stafford in 1803, having filled the high offices of ambassador to France in 1790, privy councillor in 1792, and others subsequently. He was, in 1833, created Duke of Sutherland, in which honour he was, during the same year, succeeded by the present peer.

TROWBRIDGE, WILTS, a parish and market town in Melksham hun^d and union, on the river Were: 110 miles from London (coach road 99), 10 from Devizes, 3 from Bradford. Gt. West. Rail. through Chippenham to Trowbridge station: from Derby, through Birmingham, Chippenham, &c., 169 miles. Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. The town stands on the side of a rocky hill, on the bank of the river Were, which empties itself into the Avon near Bradford, and over which there is a stone bridge. Most of the streets are narrow, and irregularly built. In the market-place there was formerly a stone cross, which was removed at the beginning of the present century. Trowbridge is not mentioned in Domesday Book, and therefore it is believed to have been founded subsequent to the Norman Conquest, but as a station it soon grew into importance; for, about the middle of the 12th century, it was a large fortress, garrisoned by the troops of the Empress Maud, who were, however, obliged to surrender to the forces of King Stephen. John of Gaunt appears to have repaired and renovated this fortress; and when Lancashire was constituted a county-palatine. Trowbridge was recognised in some charters as a portion of the duchy of Lancaster. Indeed, it is probable that this was made the chancery of the duchy, as the rents are paid there even at the present day. There are now no evident remains of the castle, but the moat, the vallum, and other of its fortifications can clearly be traced. Leland notices this place as being in ruins in his time, but the site has been sold upon building leases. He further goes on to say—There is a fair standing place for market men to stand yn, in the hart of the towne, and this is made viii square, and a pillar in the midle, as there is one made in Malmesbyri far fairer than this. Lambard, too, has a statement peculiarly applicable to modern times. Writing in 1657, he says, speaking of the manufacture of woollen cloth, which for a long time flourished here, but which was subject to great fluctuations—Not long since it was in good plight through the exercise of clothinge, but now lately it is impoverished by the death of suche as occupied that arte. A common thing it is with the townes of the west cuntrye, to ebbe and flowe in prosperitie, bycause they depend for the most part upon drapinge. And as two or three quicke occupiers are able to set a hole towne on fote, by reason of the great numbers that they sett on worke; so the death, or other decay of a few suche, bringeth many tymes hole townes to wrack and desolation. It weare to be wished, thearfore, that the statut, which sendeth clothiers to townes, were severally putt in execution; for thearby bothe some convenience used in corners of the cuntrye should be the more easily epyed, and the townes (the only nources of good artes) the better maintained. Woollen manufacture in the lighter fabrics is still carried on here to a considerable extent, there being admirable means of communication with other parts of the country by means of the Great Western Railway, and the Kennet and Avon Canal. This is not a corporate town, and its government is therefore vested in the magistrates for the county; but a court-leet and a court-baron are annually held here, at which constables and the other subordinate officers are appointed. The principal charitable foundations of Trowbridge are the "Old" and "New" almshouses; the former founded by a family of the name of Yerbury, about the year 1686. The old almshouses were taken down in the year 1811, but the new ones still stand, inhabited by six widows, who have each a garden-plot, and participate in the common income of £130 per annum. One of the schools here has an endowment of £50 per annum; the other charities produce about £115 per annum. The living, a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Salisbury, with the perpetual curacy of Staverton and Trinity, is valued at £20. 12s. 8½d.: pres. net income, £600: patron, Duke of Rutland: pres. incumbent, J. TRURO, CORNWALL, a borough and market town, considered the chief town in the county, in the hun^d. of Powder, union of Truro: 299 miles from London (coach road 275), 21 from Bodmin, 8 from Grampound. — Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol and Exeter to Plymouth, thence 55 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 313 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 2.35 p.m.: post closes 9.50 a.m. — This seems to have been a place of considerable importance even before the Norman Conquest; and Leland seems to say that there was once a castle here. He says—There is a castille a quarter of a mile by west out of Truro, longing to the Erles of Cornwall, now clene down. The scile thereof is now used for a shoting and playing place out of the town of Truro. This castle is not mentioned in Domesday Book, and must therefore have been erected after the Conquest, most probably by some of the Norman Earls of Cornwall. The town is thought to have sprung from the castle; but as the writer above alluded to observes—In those days the traders were rather desirous of getting out of the clutches of the marauding masters of such fortresses, than of getting into them. The town, seated amongst beautiful and picturesque scenery, is, for its size, one of the finest in the country. It is situated in a valley, from which other valleys diverge, surrounded by lofty hills and broken points, and each of them embellished by some rapid and translucent stream, while the acclivities are enlivened by the residence and villas of the opulent people of the locality. The streets are numerous and well paved, lighted with gas, and well supplied with water. Most of the streets are wide and handsome; the houses are mostly faced with granite or with freestone, well built, and on the increase. The church is a very fine structure of the 15th century. The town-hall is a large and substantial building, placed over the main entrance to the market-place. The coinage-hall is also a building of considerable magnitude, and, added to these, there are the county infirmary, the theatre, and a ball-room. The Royal Scientific and Literary Institution was erected at an expense of £2,100. There is also a public library, which contains several thousand volumes. Near the middle of the town, on the opening to Falmouth, a monument was erected, in 1835, as a memorial of the exertions of the brothers Richard and John Lander, the celebrated African travellers, both of whom were born in the town. There was anciently an old Dominican chapel and priory here. The living of St. Mary's is a rectory in the archd^y of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, rated at £16, returned at £140; gross income, £137: patron, the Earl of Mount-Edgcumbe. The church, though one of the most beautiful edifices of the time of Henry VII. remaining in the county, is somewhat disfigured by the architecture of one of its ends, and by an ill-designed spire. This church much resembles that of Launceston. It contains some monuments not devoid of interest. The other livings connected with Truro are St. Clement's—(which see); St. Kea's, a vicarage with Kenwyn—(which also see); and St. John's and Chacewater, perpetual curacies in the patronage of the Vicar of Kenwyn. Here are an Independent church; a Baptist, formed in 1789; a Wesleyan Methodist in 1830; one of the New Connexion; a Bible Christian, formed in 1816; and also places of worship for the Society of Friends and the Unitarians. Tanner says—In the latter end of King Henry III.'s reign, a convent of Black friars settled in Kenwyn-street. Rauf Reskner left a benefaction, 2d Edward IV., to Edward Aglianby. The grammar-school has two exhibitions of £30 each to Exeter College, Oxford, which were left by the late Sir John Eliot. A college for mining students has also been proposed by Sir Charles Lemon, who, in order to carry out the plan, will give £10,000, or, if necessary, £20,000 at his death, for its founding and endowment, on the condition that a levy of one farthing in the pound shall be made upon all minerals; and that the institution be carried on strictly in accordance with the principles of the Church of England, the archdeacon of the district being, ex officio, a member of the governing body, and a visitor of the college; that a knowledge of the Christian religion shall be required of all the inmates, but that a perfect academical equality, according to grade, shall be preserved for all the members of the college, to whatever section of the church they may be attached. The jurisdiction of the mayor of Truro formerly extended over the harbour of Falmouth, but this distinction was lost early in the last century. In the creek which forms the harbour of the former place, the water at every spring-tide covers a space of nearly two miles in length, and of depth sufficient to navigate vessels of 150 tons burthen. The sea, at ebb, of course falls to the same distance, and vessels are therefore, during its continuance, obliged to unload at Mopas; but from its site, at the head of Falmouth harbour, and midland between the two seas, Truro must always be considered a port of great local importance; and the greater part of the copper and tin ore mined in Cornwall, is consequently shipped here for smelting in South Wales, in vessels which bring back coals for mining purposes. In addition to this advantage, there are a number of establishments for the conversion of the ores into metals, and for the proper formation of the metals themselves into ingots and bars. Most of the inhabitants are consequently employed in the mines or in these establishments. Truro was a borough by prescription, but was also incorporated by Reginald Earl of Cornwall, by a charter which is without a date. This charter was for centuries supposed to be lost, but, during an investigation made by the corporation within these few years, it was discovered, and now forms one of the most interesting and valuable of the archives of the town. Under the municipal act, the borough is divided into two wards, governed by six aldermen, and eighteen common councillors, under the usual corporate style, whose public income is estimated at £1,000 a year. Truro has returned two members to parliament ever since the 23d of Edward I.—The living (St. Mary), a rectory in the archd^y of Cornwall, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £16: pres. net income, £150: patron, Rev. TUNBRIDGE (or TONBRIDGE), KENT, a parish and market town in the lowey and union of Tunbridge, lathe of Aylesford, on the river Medway: 41 miles from London (coach road 30), 12 from Maidstone, 7 from Seven-Oaks. — Sou. East. Rail. to Tunbridge station: from Derby, through London, &c., 173 miles. — Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 1 p.m.: post closes 11.25 a.m. and 10 p.m. — The name is derived from the Norman French, and signifies an exempt jurisdiction round the castle, chief mansion, or religious house, which held it in fee. In the Domesday Book this district is described as that of Haslow, and was held at that period by Richard de Tonebridge of Odo, bishop of Baieux, who had detached it from the see of Canterbury, to which it originally belonged, and to which it was directed to be restored by the assembly at Pinnenden, ordered by William the Conqueror to determine the truth of the allegations brought by Archbishop Lanfranc against the rapacious Odo, and at which, after three days' inquiry, he was adjudged to refund no less than twenty-three manors. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—A priory of Black canons was erected here by Richard of Clare, earl of Hertford, about the latter end of the reign of King Henry I. Its patroness was St. Mary Magdalene, and its revenues were valued in spiritualities at £48. 11s. 4d. per annum, and in temporalities at £120. 16s. 11d.; in all, £169. 10s. 3d. per annum. It was one of those small monasteries which Cardinal Wolsey procured to be dissolved, and who had a grant of the same, 17th Henry VIII. Tunbridge is one of those old towns which, remote from the remarkable advance in commercial and manufacturing prosperity in this country, has seen but little change. It consists principally of one long, and in several places, wide street, from which a variety of others diverge, being crossed towards the south by the five streams into which the Medway is here divided, and one of which is called the Tun. The southern branch was at one time considered the main stream, but a navigable branch was made out of that which formerly fed the moat of the castle; and at the south end of the principal bridge, is the celebrated Tunbridge ware manufactory, carried on by the family of Mr. Wise for upwards of a century. Near this bridge there is also a wharf, for the reception of the timber brought from the neighbouring district, and sent down the Medway. The church is a modern structure of elegant design, with a square tower, and contains some very pleasing monuments; one of these, erected in 1615, to the memory of Sir Anthony Denton, Knt., is inscribed with the following most important truth, though very plainly expressed—

"Christ's death 's my life; my death to life is portal;
So through two deaths, I have one life immortal."

The town-hall is a plain building. The principal architectural ornament is the grammar-school, which has of late years been very much improved in appearance. It was originally founded and endowed by Sir Andrew Judd, lord mayor of London, in 1551, who was a native of Tunbridge, and who obtained for it, in the 7th of Edward VI., letters patent. For a long period of time, the specific legacy was barely more than sufficient to defray the expenses of the establishment, but the ground belonging to it having been largely built upon, the income became so large, that the Skinners' Company, who are the trustees of this charity, under the sanction of a master in Chancery, advanced the chief master's income from £20 a year—its original amount—to £500 a year, and the usher's to £200 a-year. Boys within ten miles of Tunbridge are entitled to the benefit of the institution. The other charitable endowments of the town produce about £200 a year, which is expended benevolently in various ways. The Tunbridge poor-law union comprises ten parishes, with a population of about 21,500 persons, spread over an area of 49 square miles. From the agreeability of the district, the resident gentry are very numerous.---The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a vicarage in the diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £20. 3s. 4d.: pres. net income, £240: patron, Christ Church, Oxford: pres. incumbent, Sir C. Hardinge, 1809: contains 14,730 acres: 1,709 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 12,530: do. in 1851, 14,330: ass^d. prop^r £19,531: poor rates in 1848, £3,242. 10s.---Market day, Monday. TUNBRIDGE-WELLS, KENT, a celebrated watering-place, partly in the parish of Tunbridge, partly in that of Speldhurst in the above county, and partly in the parish of Frant, county of Sussex: 46 miles from London (coach road 36), 6 from Tunbridge, 25 from Chatham.---Sou. East. Co^r. Rail. to Tunbridge-Wells station: from Derby, through London, &c., 178 miles.---Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 2½ p.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. and 10 p.m.---This, which was once only an inconsiderable village, has now risen to be a town of splendour and fashionable resort, and one of the best frequented watering-places in the kingdom. It is divided into four principal districts---Mount Ephraim, Mount Sion, Mount Pleasant, and the Wells, mostly consisting of rows and terraces of elegant houses, with by-streets, in which there are excellent repositories for all the necessaries of life. The inns and hotels are of the first order, and replete with all the appliances that the most affluent and luxurious tastes can require.---The living is a perpetual curacy, in the archd^y and diocese of Rochester, and in the patronage of certain trustees. The church is a plain edifice, with an ornamental ceiling. To accommodate the increased number of residents, Holy Trinity chapel was erected near the Calverley property, at a cost of £12,000. It is a handsome structure, in the early English style, and contains about 1,500 sittings. Decimus Burton, Esq., was the architect. Christ church, an elegant new edifice, has recently been completed. It was built from designs of R. P. Brown, Esq., of Greenwich, and contains 1,300 sittings. Here are also several dissenting chapels, with schools attached. The Independent chapel, on Mount Sion, was originally built for the Presbyterians; but it was thoroughly repaired, and applied to the use of the Congregational body, through the exertions of Thomas Wilson, Esq. The chapel is a plain substantial building, capable of seating 450 persons. The Huntingdonian chapel, situated at the entrance of the town from the metropolis, was opened by the celebrated George Whitfield. The Baptist chapel in Hanover Road was erected at a cost of about £1,265. The Wesleyan chapel, pleasantly situated at Vale-Royal, adjoining the London Road, is a neat building, capable of accommodating upwards of 400 persons. The Roman Catholic chapel, in Grosvenor Road, was erected in 1838. The district called the Wells, is situated in a valley formed by the surrounding hills, and contains, besides the springs, the theatre, ball-rooms, libraries, public parades, market-house, and shops for the sale of jewellery, toys, and Tunbridge ware. When the medicinal qualities of the springs were first discovered cannot now be precisely ascertained, but it is believed that they were known at a very early period. They were, so far as we can ascertain, first brought into notice about the year 1606, when Dudley, Lord North, a dissolute young nobleman of the court of James I., having very much impaired his constitution, was induced to take up his residence at Eridge Castle to recruit his health. His attention having been attracted by the ochrous nature of the water, he was prompted to try its effects. Thence he found to be highly beneficial. He consulted his physicians in London, and returned under their advice the next summer to drink it, and was completely restored. His recovery excited much notice among the higher classes of society, and by degrees, though not until after some years, the wells began to grow into repute, and at length attained their present reputation. There are few endowments in Tunbridge-Wells, but its charitable institutions are numerous and well sustained.---Fair, Whit-Monday.---Bankers: Molineux, Whitfield, Dicker, & Co.---draw on Williams, Deacon, & Co.; Branch of London and County Joint Stock Banking Co.---draw on Head Office, 21 Lombard Street.---Castle, Calverley, and Royal Sussex Hotels.

The church is a fine structure, and contains several interesting monuments to members of the noble families of Mordaunt and Peterborough. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Independents have chapels in the village. Many of the inhabitants are employed in making thread-lace. — The living (All Saints), a rectory in the archd^y of Bedford, and diocese of Ely, is valued at £16: pres. net income, £458: patron, T. C. Higgins: pres. incumbent, J. W. Hawkesley, 1827: contains 4,260 acres: 200 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 960: ass^d. prop^y £3,819: poor rates in 1848, £202. 11s. — There are several pleasing mansions in the vicinity, the most conspicuous of which is Turvey Abbey, the seat of Charles Longuet Higgins, Esq., the lord of the manor, grandson of John Higgins, Esq., who was sheriff of London in 1787, and purchased the manor of Turvey. Mr. Higgins' father was high sheriff of Bedfordshire in 1801, and a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of the county.

TUTBURY, STAFFORD, a parish, formerly a market town, in the north division of Offlow hun^d, union of Burton-upon-Trent, on the southern bank of the Dove: 137 miles from London (coach road 130), 5 from Burton-upon-Trent, 11 from Derby. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby and Leicester to Burton-upon-Trent, thence 56 miles: from Derby, through Burton-upon-Trent, &c., 15 miles. — Money orders issued at Burton-upon-Trent: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. — The ancient trade of the town was in wool-stapling, but that is now extinct; but on the river Dove there are several establishments, which, combined, employ some hundreds of hands in the manufacture of cotton goods. The church, a fine Norman edifice, is very spacious in its dimensions, and once formed part of a priory which, as Bishop Tanner says, was founded here by Henry de Ferrers about A.D. 1080. It was a cell to the abbey of St. Peter super Divam in Normandy, and on that account seized some time into the king's hands among the alien priories; but being at length made denison, it continued till the surrender, 30th Hen. VIII., about which time the yearly revenues of this house were rated to be worth £199. 14s. 10d. clear, but in the whole, £244. 16s. 8d. Speed. The site was granted, 6th Edu. VI., to Sir William Cavendish. But the chief glory of Tutbury is its ancient castle, of which Mr. White, in his history of Staffordshire, says—"The last Saxon who held Tutbury was Hugh de Albrincis, but he was dispossessed by the Norman Conqueror, who gave it to Henry de Ferrers, who rebuilt the castle upon a larger scale. In the Ferrers family it remained, till Robert de Ferrers, the rebel Earl of Derby, forfeited it in 1250 to Henry III., who bestowed it on his second son, Edmund, Earl of Lancaster. In 1332, it once more reverted to the Crown, in consequence of the rebellion of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, against Edward II. The castle having suffered considerably through this revolt, and being afterwards allowed to fall into decay, was rebuilt upon the ancient site in 1350, by John of Gaunt, the first duke of Lancaster, and the fourth son of Edward III. It now became the scene of much festivity and splendour; and the number of minstrels who crowded to it was so great, that, as an expedient for preserving order among them, the celebrated John of Gaunt appointed a chief minstrel, with the title of king, and inferior officers under him, to assist in the execution of the laws, which the illustrious but whimsical duke embodied in a charter, granted to the 'King of the Minstrels,' in 1381. The king and other officers of the musical fraternity were elected annually, with much pomp and ceremony, on the festival of the Assumption of the Virgin Mary, when, after the business of their court was finished, and after partaking of a sumptuous repast at the castle, the minstrels assembled in the afternoon at the gate of the priory, where the prior, by the tenure under which John of Gaunt had granted a new charter to the monastery, was obliged to provide them with a bull; and thus commenced that ludicrous and inhuman sport called the 'Tutbury bull-running.' The bull, previous to its being presented to the minstrels, had always his horns, ears, and tail cut off, his body besmeared over with soap, and his nostrils blown full of pepper. In this horrid condition he was let loose; and if the surrounding minstrels could catch hold of him so as to deprive him of the smallest portion of his hair, he was declared to be their property, provided this could be done in Staffordshire, and before sunset. But before being delivered to the minstrels, the bull was baited with dogs at the market-cross. This custom is supposed by some antiquaries to have been an imitation of the Spanish bull-fights, which is not improbable, as the eccentric, yet good-natured prince, John of Gaunt, was king of the provinces of Castile and Leon in Spain. After several centuries, the pursuit of the bull, which had been confined to the minstrels, became general; and numerous Turongs, from Tutbury and the neighbouring places, promiscuously joined in the chase, which often ended in quarrels and bloodshed. The last bull-running took place in 1778, when William Bennet, of Tutbury, was killed in an affray with a party from Burton; in consequence of which the clergy, and other inhabitants of the neighbourhood, successfully petitioned the king, as lord of the honour of Tutbury, to absolve the Duke of Devonshire from this singular tenure, under which he held the priory lands. On the demise of John of Gaunt, the duchy of Lancaster and all its dependencies devolved on his son, who afterwards ascended the throne as Henry IV., so that the honour and castle of Tutbury, with his other possessions, became attached to the Crown, as they have since remained. Mary Queen of Scots, during her long captivity in England, was, for several years, confined here. In the civil wars of the 17th century, the castle was garrisoned for Charles I., who spent a fortnight here in 1643; but after a long siege, it surrendered to the parliamentarians, under Colonel Brereton, in 1648, and was soon afterwards dismantled. Since then it has been a neglected ruin, which, from its situation, upon a lofty conical mount, on the south bank of the Dove, has now a very picturesque appearance. From the ruins which still remain, it is evident that the whole area of the castle contained about three acres, and was encompassed by a strong embattled wall, and a broad deep ditch; over which, Plott says, there was in his time an extraordinary bridge, composed of distinct pieces of wood, none of them above a yard long, though unsupported by any archwork, pillars, or other prop, and yet 'the more weight was upon it, the stronger it was.' The ancient gateway is tolerably entire, and towers and buildings, with hewel staircases, as well as vestiges of divisions of rooms with fire-places, can yet be discovered in different parts of the walls, which appear to have been of immense strength and thickness, constructed of hewen freestone, with admixtures of gypsum; so that enough still remains to declare the former extent and grandeur of this once princely residence. A round tower, intended to appear as a ruin, has been erected on a high mound by Lord Vernon, the present lessee of the castle and the adjacent grounds; and among the ruins is a modern house, occupied by a land-surveyor. The summit of the castle-hill commands an extensive and picturesque view of Needwood Forest on the south, and of Dovedale and Derbyshire on the north." The Independents, Calvinistic, Wesleyan, and Primitive Methodists, have chapels here. The charities produce about £490 per annum. The Queen is lady of the manor or honour of Tutbury, the jurisdiction of which extends over Staffordshire, and to portions of several neighbouring counties. Courts leet and baron are consequently held annually in her Majesty's name. In 1831, several workmen, while employed in making a cutting for a better supply of water for some manufacturing processes, discovered a number of silver coins about the size of a sixpence, and at length upwards of 100,000 of these were found, supposed from collateral circumstances to have been the treasure of Thomas, Earl of Lancaster, lost during his retreat in 1321, before the forces of Edward II. The living, a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £7: pres. net income, £131: patron, Vicar of Bakewell: preb. incumbent, Henry J. Peach, 1843: contains 4,110 acres: 297 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,835: do. in 1851, 2,130: ass^d. prop^y. £5,472. Market day, Tuesday. Fairs: Feb. 14, Aug. 15, Dec. 1, and on the second Monday after Michaelmas-day, for hiring servants.

Jarvis, 1826: contains 840 acres: 34 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 227: ass^d. prop^y. £1,129: poor rates in 1848, £93. 19s.

TUXFORD, NOTTINGHAM, a parish and market town in South Clay division of Bassetlaw wapentake, union of East Retford: 161 miles from London (coach road 138), 7 from East Retford, 12 from Worksop. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Nottingham, and Newark, to Tuxford station: from Derby, through Nottingham, Newark, &c., 47 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — The town is a pleasing place, built on the old Great North Road, on the site of a more ancient one, which was destroyed by fire in 1702. The trade in hops here is quite on the decline, and hop-yards are now being converted into arable land. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—John de Lungvilers, 25th Edu. III., obtained licence to found in the parsonage-house a college for five chaplains, one of whom to be warden; but that not taking effect, he got leave, 31st Edu. III., to give this advowson to Newstede priory, that they might find five chantry priests, viz., three at Tuxford, and two in their own conventual church. The free grammar-school was founded and endowed by Charles Read, Esq., with £40 a year; the other charities produce about £38 per annum. The Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. — The living (St. Nicholas), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y. of Nottingham, and diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £4. 14s. 7d.: pres. net income, £200; patron, Trinity College, Cambridge: pres. incumbent, H. TWERTON. See TWIVERTON, TWICKENHAM, MIDDLESEX, a parish and village in Isleworth hun^d, union of Brentford: 14 miles from London (coach road 11), 4 from Brentford, 2 from Richmond. — Sou. West. Rail. to Twickenham station: from Derby, through London, &c., 146 miles. — London letters deliv^d. four times each way daily. — Twickenham is situated on the western bank of the Thames, and in one of the most delightful districts in the kingdom. The village and its neighbourhood are replete with the residences of the higher classes of society. The church, a fine structure in the Doric order, rebuilt several years ago, contains the ashes of the poet Pope, who had a villa here, the only remains of which now are a grotto, over the entrance of which are engraved the lines, familiar to every tourist:—

"Approach, but awful; lo! the Ægean grot
Where, nobly pensive, St. John sat and thought;
Where British sighs from dying Wyndham stole,
And the bright flame was shot through Marchmont's soul;
Let such, such only, tread this sacred floor,
Who dare to love their country and be poor!"

The house, like the willows which the poet planted on the river's bank, have long since been removed. One of the schools here is endowed with £133 a year. There are oil and gunpowder mills in the parish. Strawberry Hill was for several years the residence of the celebrated Horace Walpole, afterwards Lord Orford, who accumulated a vast number of articles of vertu, and rendered this place famous by his taste, pleasantry, and distinguished position in fashionable society. But after his death the house was dismantled, and all his collection disposed of by auction. — The living (St. Mary), a vicarage in the archd^y. of Middlesex, and diocese of London, is valued at £11: pres. net income, £717: patron, Dean and Chapter of Westminster: pres. incumbent, C. Proby, 1818: contains 2,440 acres: 854 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 5,208: do. in 1851, 5,908: ass^d. prop^y. £22,548: poor rates in 1848, £1,361. 1s. — The Earl of Cardigan has a very pleasing villa here; as also has Samuel Weld, Esq., a member of the ancient family of Weld, whose principal seat is in Devonshire. The seat of Sir William George Johnson, Bart., is also situated at Twickenham. Sir William traces his immediate descent from William Johnson, an eminent commander in the first American war, and who, having greatly distinguished himself, not only by his military services, but also by many successful negotiations with the Indian tribes, was created a baronet in 1755. Of that gentleman the present baronet is a direct descendant.

Sir Thomas de Berney, Knt., married Margaret, daughter of William de Reedham, by which he acquired lands there, and whither he removed in the time of Edward III. One of his descendants, Henry Berney, Esq., removed to the old seat of the family, which stood near the church, and built a magnificent mansion, which he called "Park Hall in Reedham." The grandson of that gentleman, Richard Berney, Esq., whose brother was high sheriff of Norfolk in 1647, was created a baronet in 1620, and from him, the present baronet is a direct descendant.

TYNEMOUTH WITH NORTH SHIELDS, NORTHUMBERLAND, a borough, parish, and seaport, in the east division of Castle ward, union of Tynemouth, at the mouth of the river Tyne, on its northern bank: the parish includes the townships and chapelrys of North Shields, Tynemouth, Chirton, Cullercoats, Monk-Seaton, Murton, or Moortown, Preston, and Whitley: 301 miles from London (coach road 278), 1 from North Shields, 9 from Newcastle. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, York, and Newcastle, to Tynemouth: from Derby, through York, &c., 179 miles. Money orders issued at North Shields: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m., 11 a.m., and 6½ p.m.: post closes 1½ p.m. and 7½ p.m. This place, in fact, forms part of North Shields, with which, in conjunction, it returns one member to parliament. Formerly it was but "a poor miserable village," desolately situated on the sea-coast, without attraction and without comfort. Now it is an elegant and commodious town, filled with noble public buildings, adorned with handsome squares, streets, churches, and other erections, having, during the last century, largely partaken of that commercial development by which the country has been so much enriched. The harbour, at the mouth of the Tyne, is in every way convenient, and so spacious that upwards of 2,000 sail of vessels can anchor there at one time; many of those arriving both from north and south, which are intended for Newcastle, anchoring, because having too great a draught for the river up to that town. The mouth of the river forms a very safe haven, but has only seven feet of water on the bar at ebb-tide. As regards foreign commerce, customs, &c., the port is subject to Newcastle. The principal manufactures are those requisite for cordage, sails, ship-building, and repairing generally, and the principal trade consists in the supply of marine stores, coals, and the domestic necessities required by the inhabitants of the place and its vicinity. Tynemouth village, which is situated about a mile to the eastward of Shields market-place, is formed chiefly by one long street, from which other small ones diverge. The houses are, for the most part, well built; the place is well provided with inns and lodging-houses, and during the season it is largely frequented for the purposes of sea-bathing and other recreations, by the residents of the surrounding country. Tanner, when speaking of this place in his Notitia Monastica, says—Among the monasteries and churches founded by St. Oswald, the first Christian king of Northumberland, this is reckoned to be one, though others ascribe its foundation to King Egfrid. It is evident that St. Herebald, the companion of St. John of Beverley, was monk and abbot here in the beginning of the 8th century, and before the end of it this monastery was plundered by the Danes, as it was again by them under Hingwar and Hubba in the next century, and by the same pagans a third time in the reign of King Ethelstan. The old church was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, and seems to have lain desolate till the finding of King Oswin's relics here a little before the Conquest, when, to the honour of St. Mary and that king, Tosti, Earl of Northumberland, repaired and endowed this religious house. Upon the banishment of Tosti, this country was given by the Conqueror to Robert de Mowbray, who thereupon became earl, and placed in the church here—which had been given by Waltheof, Earl of Northumberland, to the monks of York, and by Earl Albro to Durham—black monks from St. Alban's in Hertfordshire, to which abbey this priory was subordinate; though, 26th Henry VIII., it was found to have a separate yearly revenue of £397. 10s. 5d. ob. Dugd.; £511. 4s. 1d. ob. Speed. The site and most of the lands were granted, 5th Edw. VI., to John, Duke of Northumberland. The remains of this ancient institution, situated on some heavy rocks on a bold peninsula, have been converted into a military magazine and depot for troops. The present church was originally erected in 1668, but was almost entirely rebuilt of freestone in 1792. Almost every section of the Dissenters have places of worship here. One of the schools here has an endowment of £140 a year; the other charities produce about £115 a year. The Tynemouth poor-law union comprises 24 parishes, with a population of about 50,000 persons, spread over an area of 55 square miles.—The living, a disch^d vicarage, with Trinity curacy, in the archd^y of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, is valued at £24. 19s. 4d.: pres. net income, £298: patron, Duke of Northumberland: pres. incumbent, C. Reed, 1830: contains 6,570 acres: 3,736 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 27,249: do. in 1851, 31,299: ass^d prop^r £52,132: poor rates in 1848, £7,058. 17s.—Fair: first Tuesday in July.—Star and Garter Inn; Bath and Turk's Head Hotels.

Rail. through Bletchley to Banbury, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through Rugby to Banbury, &c., 81 miles.—Money orders issued at Shipston-on-Stour: London letters deliv^d. 10½ a.m.: post closes 2 p.m.—One of the schools here is endowed with £26 a year; the other charities produce about £118 a year, chiefly arising from the town-lands. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in the village. Opposite the church, on the side of a hill, there is cut the figure of a horse, which, from the colour of the soil, is called "the Red Horse," and gives its name to the neighbouring valley. It is supposed to have been formed in commemoration of the act of Richard Neville, Earl of Warwick, who killed his horse on the day of the battle of Towton, which was fought on Palm-Sunday, in the year 1461; and every year the inhabitants of Tysoe and its vicinity have a festival, assemble, and clear away on Palm-Sunday all the excrescences which have grown upon the figure during the past year. This is called "scouring the horse."—The living (St. Mary), a disch^d vicarage, with the rectory of Compton-Wynyates, in the archd^y and diocese of Worcester, is valued at £10: pres. net income, £266: patron, Marquis of Northampton: pres. incumbent, S. When Whitfield and Wesley first began to promulgate their peculiar doctrines, a wealthy inhabitant of Reading, named Cennick, became one of their most zealous adherents. He expended most of his property in erecting meeting-houses for their disciples in different parts of the country: with other places, one at Tytherton, to which he attached a burial-ground. Here he took up his residence, and acted as one of the most zealous of their followers; but when the dissensions began to arise between the two great preachers, Mr. Cennick, with his hearers, attached himself to Count Zinzendorf, and they became members of the Moravian body of Christians. He built the institution here for the society, and every appliance for domestic education, piety, and comfort, has been provided for the welfare of the inmates of the establishment. — Pop^r. in 1841, 119.

The village is pleasantly situated in a vale, through which the Wilts and Berkshire Canal is carried. Above it rises a hill, with a sudden acclivity, to the height of 893 feet, and on the top of it there are the vestiges of a British encampment, called Uffington Castle, having a diameter of about 700 feet from east to west, and of about 500 feet from north to south. On the side of the chalky cliff, an enormous figure of a horse has been cut in the turf. It is about 374 feet in length, and when the sun shines upon it, is visible at the distance of ten or twelve miles. The formation of it has been variously ascribed to the Saxons and the Danes. It has given the place the name of the "Valley of the White Horse," which extends from Uffington to Abingdon. One of the schools here is endowed with £41 a year. Six boys from Woolston have a right of access to it. —The living (St. Mary) is a disch^d vicarage, annexed to the perpetual curacies of Baulking and Woolston: contains 6,650 acres: 136 houses: ass^d prop^y £4,027: poor rates in 1848, £356. 4s.

Tithes commuted in 1792. —Uffington Hall, a fine mansion, is the seat of the Earl of Lindsey, maternally descended from the Willoughbys, the original barons of Willoughby de Eresby. Katherine, Baroness of Willoughby in her own right, and Duchess-Dowager as the widow of Charles Brandon Duke of Suffolk, brother-in-law to Henry VIII., married, secondly, Richard Bertie, Esq. of Hurst Castle, in the Isle of Wight, by whom she had a son and heir, the Hon. Peregrine Bertie, who, upon the demise of his mother in 1580, was summoned to parliament as ninth baron of Willoughby de Eresby. He married Mary, daughter of John Vere, eighteenth earl of Oxford, whose title at his father's death, Robert, the tenth baron, claimed, together with the feudal barony of Bolebec, the barony of Buldermere, and the office of lord great chamberlain of England. His lordship failed in all his pretensions except to the last office, which he sustained; but he was, in 1626, elevated to the dignity of the earldom of Lindsey, and four years afterwards made a Knight of the Garter. In the 11th of Charles I., he was installed lord high admiral of England, and in 1639 was constituted governor of Berwick. His lordship fell at the battle of Edgehill, at the head of a division of the royal army. His descendant, Robert, the fourth earl, who had been summoned to the House of Lords by the title of Baron Willoughby de Eresby during his father's lifetime, was, in 1706, advanced to the dignity of Marquis of Lindsey, and created Duke of Ancaster and Kesteven. The great-grandson of that nobleman, Robert, the fourth duke, dying unmarried, the barony of Willoughby de Eresby fell into abeyance between his sisters, until it was terminated by the Crown, and went with Priscilla, the elder of the two, by marriage, to the Burrell family. The other honours went to the uncle of Robert, Brownlow, fifth duke, who dying without issue in 1809, the dukedom and marquiseate ceased, but the earldom of Lindsey devolved upon his kinsman, General Albemarle Bertie, who became ninth earl, in which honour he was succeeded in 1818 by the present peer. —At Uffington also is the seat of James Bellairs Stevenson, Esq., whose patronymic is Bellairs, but who assumed the additional name of Stevenson on succeeding to the estates of his cousin, William Stevenson, Esq. This gentleman's family has been seated at Uffington and in the neighbourhood for nearly two centuries.

USK, MONMOUTH, a hamlet, market town, and parish, in the upper division of the hun^d. of Uak, union of Pontypool: it includes the hamlets of Glascoed and Gwchellog: 166 miles from London (coach road 141), 10 from Newport, 12 from Monmouth.---Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse and Gloucester to Newport, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 157 miles.---Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m.---Usk, which has been erected on the site of the old Roman station Burrium, or Bullaëum, as it is called by Ptolemy, derives its name from the banks of the river on which it stands. The town is composed of several streets, which, taken in their outline, are built in the form of an oblong square, the old high road to Abergavenny passing through the principal of these thoroughfares, in which, however, the houses are very irregularly built, most of them being separated from each other by gardens and orchards. The communications with other parts of the country are tolerably complete, for there is a bridge here of five arches over the Usk; and a tramway, called the Mamilhead Railway, about five miles long, runs from this bridge to the Brecknock and Abergavenny Canal, in the parish of Mamilhead. The church of Usk is in the Anglo-Norman style of architecture, having a square embattled tower at its eastern end. It was at one time the church of a priory of Benedictine nuns, founded before the year 1286, and had revenues, at the dissolution, according to Dugdale, of £55. 4s. 5d.; its possessions were given by Henry VIII. to Roger Williams. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics, all have chapels here. The town-hall is a neat Gothic structure. A free grammar-school was founded here in 1621, by Mr. Roger Edwards, for this parish, and those of Llangwm-Ucha, Llangview, and Gwerneaney, with almshouses for twelve poor persons of the four parishes; the endowment yields £438. 10s. a year. The institution of the grammar-school is divided into two parts; the master of the classical department receiving a salary equivalent to £86 a year. The almshouses stand in the parish of Llangview. Each of the pensioners receives £10 a year. Within these few years twelve new almshouses have been built near these in the form of a quadrangle; they are endowed with £39. 10s. per annum, and each of the inmates is entitled to parochial relief. The town-hall of Usk, built by the Duke of Beaufort, is a neat structure. Most of the inhabitants of the place are employed in the salmon fishery. The town is incorporated, and governed by a portreeve, who has a concurrent jurisdiction with the county magistrates, a recorder, two bailiffs, and burgesses. The recorder is appointed by the lord of the borough, and he in turn appoints the burgesses, from among whom the portreeve is chosen on the 29th of October, or some other time previous to St. Luke's day. Four constables are chosen at the annual court-leet of the lord of the manor, who is also lord of the borough, although the latter forms no part of the manor. The quarter-sessions for the county are held alternately here and at Monmouth; but the petty sessions for the division are always held here, and the portreeve and recorder hold a court-leet every second week. Usk, in conjunction with Monmouth and Newport, has returned one member to parliament ever since the time of Henry VIII. On an abrupt eminence near Usk, there are the remains of an ancient castle, consisting of a gateway, tower, and a portion of the outer walls, which enclose a considerable space of ground. The edifice suffered considerably during the conflicts between the Anglo-Saxons and the Welsh; but was dismantled during the parliamentary war, when the town also was greatly injured. The living (St. Mary), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Llandaff, is valued at £10. 10s.: pres. net income, £250: patron, W. A. Williams, Esq.: pres. incumbent, W. prop^r £426: poor rates in 1848, £5. 10s. Usselby Hall is the seat of the Right Hon. Charles Tennyson d'Eyncourt, a privy councillor, for many years a distinguished member of the House of Commons, an M.A. of Cambridge, F.R.S., F.A.S., high steward of Louth, and a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of the county of Lincoln, deriving his descent, through the barons d'Eyncourt of Blankney, and the earls of Scarsdale, barons d'Eyncourt of Sutton, from no less personages than King Edward III. and his queen, Philippa of Hainault, including among his ancestors all the members of the direct royal line, down to the time of Henry VII. This gentleman, whose patronymic was Tennyson, assumed the addition of d'Eyncourt in 1835, by royal license. Mr. D'Eyncourt's principal seat is at Bayons Manor.

USWORTH (GREAT and LITTLE), DURHAM, united townships in the parish of Washington—(which see for access, &c.)—eastern division of the ward of Chester, union of Chester-le-Street: 269 miles from London, 5 from Gateshead, 7 from Sunderland. Money orders issued at Gateshead: London letters deliv^d 12½ p.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. In 1814, the late Mrs. French built a school-house here, and endowed it with £30 per annum. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to Washington: contains 2,670 acres: 282 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,030: poor rates in 1848, £622. 5s.

UTKINTON, CHESTER, a township in the parish of Tarporley—(which see for access, &c.)—union of Nantwich: 180 miles from London, 2 from Tarporley, 10 from Northwich. Money orders issued at Tarporley: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. A spring, discovered in Delamere forest, near here, is believed to possess very valuable medicinal qualities. Contains 1,870 acres: 105 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 606: poor rates in 1848, £283. 1s.

UTON (or YEWTON), DEVON, a tithing in the parish and hun^d of Crediton—(which see for access, &c.): 173 miles from London, 2 from Crediton, 9 from Exeter. Money orders issued at Crediton: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. Contains 49 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 384.

UTTERBY, LINCOLN, a parish in the wapentake of Ludborough, union of Louth, parts of Lindsey: 146 miles from London (coach road 153), 4 from Louth, 12 from Great Grimsby. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough and Boston to Great Grimsby, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through Darnal and Gainsborough to Great Grimsby, 102 miles. Money orders issued at Louth: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 4 p.m. The church consists of a nave, north aisle, chancel, and tower, and contains several monuments of the Harrold family. The parish is bounded on the west by the old Roman Road called Barton Street, and near the village there was formerly a Roman encampment. The living (St. Andrew), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £5. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £140: patrons, Rev. T. E. Norris and others: pres. incumbent, A. D. Parkinson, 1849: contains 1,564 acres: 44 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 209: do. in 1851, 246: ass^d prop^r £2,400: poor rates in 1848, £145. 19s. Utterby House, a fine mansion, surrounded by delightful grounds, and commanding many varied and picturesque views of beautiful country, is the seat of the Rev. Henry Bristowe Benson, A.M.

UTTOXETER, STAFFORD, a market town and parish in the southern division of the hund of Totmonslow, union of Uttoxeter: it contains the townships of Crakemarsh, Creighton, Stramshall, and Woodlands, with the liberty of Loxley, and the hamlets of Blount's Green-Heath, Hockley, Little Bramshall, Spath, Beamhurst-Cave, Burndhurst-Hills, Leese-Hill, Well's-Lock, and Scoundslow-Green, and the village of Woodgate: 148 miles from London (coach road 135), 14 from Stafford, 18 from Derby. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Leicester, and Burton, to Uttoxeter station: from Derby, through Burton to Uttoxeter, 26 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. — Uttoxeter is a place of great antiquity, so much so that the origin of its name cannot be traced. Leland calls it Uttok-cester, being, in all probability, the site of a British town, afterwards converted into a Roman encampment. It belonged, in the mediæval ages, to the Peverils of the Peak, lords of Nottingham, and afterwards came to form part of the possessions of the duchy of Lancaster. During the parliamentary war, it was the seat of many military operations, and in 1672 was partially destroyed by a great conflagration. The town is situated in a rich grazing district, about three quarters of a mile from the banks of the river Dove. It has several streets, respectably lined with good houses, and is well supplied, through the shops, with all kinds of domestic necessaries. The market-place is situated about the middle of the town, and there is a considerable traffic here in corn, cheese, and other agricultural produce, the business being greatly facilitated by a branch canal which runs up to the west of the town, from the Trent and Mersey Navigation. The church, a pleasing structure, was rebuilt in 1828, at a cost of something more than £6,000, but the ancient tower and spire, which are of great beauty, and rise to the height of 179 feet, were preserved, to give great interest to the modern edifice. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, and Roman Catholics, all have chapels here. A free school was founded here in the year 1600, by the Rev. T. Alleyn, which was endowed with £13 per annum. Almshouses were founded and endowed here in 1646, by Mrs. Catherine Mastergent, and in 1720, by Mr. William Lathropp; the other charities produce about £210 per annum. Uttoxeter was first made a free borough by William de Ferrers, Earl of Derby, in the reign of Henry III. The county magistrates now hold the petty sessions for the south division of Totmonslow here. A workhouse for the accommodation of 200 inmates has been erected by the commissioners. The Uttoxeter poor-law union comprises 16 parishes, with a population of about 13,000 persons, spread over an area of 63 square miles. — The living (St. Mary) is a disch^d. vicarage, with the curacy of Stramshall, in the archd^y of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield: pres. net income, £136: patron, Dean and Chapter of Windsor: pres. incumbent, C. F. Broughton, 1829: contains 8,920 acres: 973 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 4,735: do. in 1861, 5,335: ass^d. prop^y.

£24,257: poor rates in 1848, £1,048. 10s. — Market day, Wednesday. Fairs: each alternate Wednesday, September 1, March 14 or 15; November, Thursday after St. Martin. — Bankers: Burton, Uttoxeter, and Ashbourn Union Banking Co. — draw on Roberts, Curtis, & Co. — Red Lion Inn, and White Hart Hotel. — Near the town is the noble seat of Lord Gardner, who derives his immediate descent from William Gardner, Esq. of Coleraine, who commanded a company within the walls of Derry during the memorable siege of that city. He left a son, William Gardner, Esq., who became colonel of the 11th Dragoons. The fourth son of that gallant gentleman, Allan Gardner, entered the navy in 1755, was appointed lieutenant of the Bellona frigate in 1760, and raised, after much distinguished service, to the rank of post-captain in 1766. In 1785, Captain Gardner was appointed commodore and commander-in-chief of his Majesty's naval forces at Jamaica. In 1793, he was elected member for Plymouth, and shortly afterwards appointed lord of the Admiralty. He was then promoted to be rear-admiral of the blue, and in the following year made rear-admiral of the white, and major-general of Marines, being presented with a gold chain by the king in person, as a mark of his Majesty's approbation of his conduct during the memorable actions of Earl Howe, on the 29th of May, and the 1st of June, 1794. On the 4th of July, Admiral Gardner was promoted to be vice-admiral of the blue, and in the following month created a baronet. On the 3rd of November, Sir Allan received the thanks of the House of Commons for his gallant and able conduct in the action fought by Lord Bridport, off Port L'Orient, in which he was second in command. In 1799, Sir Allan was advanced to the rank of admiral of the blue, and elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Gardner. The son of that eminent nobleman also rendered distinguished services to his country, rose to the rank of an admiral, and was made a K.C.B. The present peer succeeded as third baron in 1815. — Doveridge Hall, in this neighbourhood, is the seat of Henry Manners Cavendish, Baron Waterpark. His lordship, who is colonel of the Devonshire Militia, is descended from a branch of the ancient house of Cavendish, from which the dukes of Devonshire derive their origin, and was seated at Doveridge in the reign of Edward VI. One of them, Henry Cavendish, Esq., went with his relative, the Duke of Devonshire, when his grace, in 1737, assumed the lord-lieutenancy of Ireland, was appointed chancellor of the Exchequer, and sworn of the privy council there. That right hon. gentleman was created a baronet of Great Britain in 1755. His son, Sir Henry, who was appointed receiver-general of Ireland in 1779, and sworn of the privy council, married Sarah, only daughter and heiress of Richard Bradshawe, Esq., collaterally descended from Lord President Bradshawe, by whom he had a numerous issue. His lady, after his death, was created Baroness Waterpark, in the peerage of Ireland. The title devolved upon Sir Henry's eldest son and heir, Richard, who thus became the second Baron Waterpark, and of that nobleman the present peer was the heir.

UWCH-CRAIG, MERIONETH, a hamlet in the parish of Llandewi—(which see for access, &c.)—union of Dolgelly, North Wales: 225 miles from London, 4 from Barmouth, 7 from Harlech. Money orders issued at Barmouth: London letters deliv^d 3½ p.m.: post closes 9 a.m.—Contains 19 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 98.

UWCH-LLAWR-COED, MONTGOMERY, a township in the parish of Llanwnnog—(which see for access, &c.)—North Wales: 181 miles from London, 6 from Newtown, 7 from Llanfair.—Popⁿ in 1841, 403.

UWCH-CARREG (or UCHYGARREG), MONTGOMERY, a township in the parish and hun^d of Machynllaeth—(which see for access, &c.)—North Wales: 206 miles from London, 1 from Machynllaeth, 12 from Dinasymow.—Money orders issued at Machynllaeth: London letters deliv^d 12½ p.m.: post closes noon.—Popⁿ in 1841, 98.

UWCH-COED (or UCHYCOED), MONTGOMERY, a township in the parish of Penegoes: 206 miles from London, 18 from Llanidloes.—(For access and postal arrangements, see above.)—Popⁿ in 1841, 403.

UXBRIDGE, MIDDLESEX, a hamlet, market town, and chapelry, in the parish of Hillington, hun^d of Elthorne, union of Uxbridge: 16 miles from London (coach road 15), 10 from Brentford, 8 from Windsor.—Gt. West. Rail. to Uxbridge station: from Derby, through London, &c., 148 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 1 p.m.: post closes 10 a.m. and 9 p.m.—This place was anciently called Oxebrugge, or Woxbrugge, subsequently modified into Waxbridge and Oxbridge, and hence its present appellation. An impression seems to prevail that it was founded in the time of Alfred the Great, but no authentic data have been adduced for the supposition, except the fact that the name is in accordance with the Saxon etymology of his reign. The town, which consists principally of one long street, nearly a mile in length, is situated on a gentle declivity, having the market-house in the centre. During the great rebellion, the parliamentary army had its head-quarters here in 1647. The chapel, which was erected about the year 1447, is a plain structure, but contains a curious font and some interesting monuments; the incumbent must be a fellow of Pembroke College, Oxford, and the patrons are the trustees of G. Townsend, Esq. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and the Society of Friends, have chapels here. The charities are various. In 1695, Mr. George Pitt of Strathfieldsay, made a devise of property, which now yields £588 per annum, chiefly arising from a toll of a pint from every sack of grain sold in Uxbridge market. The money is mostly expended in a weekly distribution to the poor, subscriptions to the freeschool, in keeping the market-house in repair, and in certain annuities given under authority by trustees originally appointed in 1820. The other charities amount to about £110 a year. The town is under the superintendence of two constables and four head-boroughs. The county magistrates hold petty sessions here, on the first and third Mondays in every month. The Uxbridge poor-law union comprises ten parishes, containing a population of about 13,000 persons, spread over an area of 44 square miles. From the agreeability of the neighbourhood, the resident gentry are very numerous.—The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to Hillington: contains 574 houses: ass^d prop^y £7,111: poor rates in 1848, £1,290. 12s.—Market days, Thursday and Saturday. Fairs: March 25, July 31, September 29, and October 11.—Bankers: Hull, Smith, & Co.—draw on Glyn, Halifax, & Co.—White Horse Inn, and King's Arms Hotel.

VALE-ROYAL, CHESTER, a beautiful valley in the parish of Whitegate. Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—Prince Edward, eldest son of Henry III., began in his father's lifetime, viz., A.D. 1266, an abbey in his manor of Dernhale, for 100 monks of the Cistercian order. But when he became king, 1277, he laid the foundation of a stately monastery, not far from thence, in a more pleasant situation, which he called Vale-Royal; hither the monks removed about 1281, but were forced to live in mean and strait lodgings for several years, till their great abbey and all its offices, which, in this cheap country, cost £32,000 in building, were finished, A.D. 1330. The conventual church here was dedicated to our Lord Jesus Christ, the Virgin Mary, St. Nicholas, and St. Nicholas; and it was endowed, 26th Henry VIII., with lands and revenues to the clear yearly value of £540. 6s. 2d. The site of this abbey was granted, 35th Henry VIII., to Thomas Holcroft. The property ultimately came into the hands of Lord Delamere, but the only vestige of this noted valley is a spacious mansion, occupying its site, which may be seen from the viaduct that runs by the place.

VAUXHALL, LAMBETH, a celebrated place of public resort, in the parish of Lambeth, forming part of the metropolis. The gardens, as the grounds are called, occupy a space of about 11 acres, are well wooded, and beautifully laid out. The manor, originally called Faukeshall, or, as it would seem to be more correctly rendered, Foxhall, was, in 1615, the property of Jane Vaux, and the mansion, which formerly stood here, was then called Stockdens. The domain, however, passed through various hands, until it became the property of Sir Samuel Moreland, who, in the reign of Charles I., displayed some curious proofs of his skill in mechanics. Aubrey says, that, in 1667, Sir Samuel added a public room to the gardens, which had been laid out under his directions; and in the time of Queen Anne, they became a noted place of fashionable resort, for Addison, in the "Spectator," introduces Sir Roger de Coverley there. He says, "We made the best of our way to Foxhall;" and describes the gardens as "exceedingly pleasant at this time of the year. When I considered," says he, "the fragrancy of the walks and bowers, with the choirs of birds that sung upon the trees, and the tribe of people that walked under their shades, I could not but look on this place as a sort of Mahomedan paradise." Vauxhall resembled our modern tea-gardens until about the year 1730, when a lease was taken of them by a Mr. Tyers, who issued a notice, that other entertainments than those which had been hitherto met with would be provided under the term of Ridotto al Fresco. The name took, and Vauxhall Gardens soon superseded Ranelagh in public estimation. Since then the applicabilities of Vauxhall have been, year by year, increased until now, when almost every species of amusement may be found within its precincts. Around there is a large and thriving neighbourhood, most of the opulent denizens being connected with the trade upon the Thames, on the banks of which the district lies.

VAYNOR, BRECON, a parish in the hun^d. of Penkelly, union of Merthyr-Tydvil, South Wales: it comprises the hamlets of Ced-y-Cymar, Dyffrin, and Gelli. —(For access and postal arrangements, see MERTHYR-TYDVIL.) —The living is a rectory in the archd^y. of Brecon, and diocese of St. David's: pres. net income, £265: patron, Prince of Wales: pres. incumbent, W. Nor. Rail. through Boston to Eastville station, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Nottingham, Boston, &c., 83 miles.—Money orders issued at Boston: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m.—This place, which was formerly of considerable importance, is situated in a marshy district, on a creek or haven, which was formerly capable of admitting vessels of considerable burthen, but which has, within the last century, been so warped up that the smallest craft cannot enter it. It is believed that the town originally stood half a mile higher up the creek, at a spot now termed High Wainfleet, and where, in fact, the church of All Saints stood until about the year 1820. The old church of St. Mary is in ruins, and that of All Saints, a very curious ancient fabric, was taken down in 1820, when the present real ecclesiastical edifice was built out of the materials. The free grammar-school was founded in 1484, by William Wainfleet, bishop of Winchester, by whom it was endowed with £10 per annum; the school-house is a handsome building on the south-east side of the town. Wainfleet sent a burgess to parliament in the 11th year of Edward III., and supplied two ships towards the armament sent against Brittany in 1359. The Bethlehem free school was founded in 1831, by the governors of Bethlehem Hospital, and is attended by about 140 children. The Wesleyan Methodists and Society of Friends have places of worship here. During the civil wars, the bridge of Wainfleet was considered a pass of the first importance.—The living (All Saints) is a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of St. Thomas: the latter is in the patronage of the trustees of Bethlehem Hospital, the former in that of the Lord Chancellor: amount of both livings, £554 per annum: contains 8,270 acres: 361 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 2,000: ass^d. prop^r. £9,407: poor rates in 1848, £381. 8s. The township of Wakefield includes the greater part of the town, the buildings on the south-western side advancing in a continuous street into the neighbouring agricultural township of Alverthorpe. Most of our best archæologists believe that a town existed on this site in the time of the Romans, and in Domesday Book it is called Wackfield. The manor was a royal demesne in the time of Edward the Confessor, and so continued until the reign of Henry I., who granted it, in 1116, to William Earl of Warren, from whom, through several possessors, it has come to the family of the Duke of Leeds. A celebrated battle was fought on Wakefield Green in 1460, between Margaret of Anjou, queen of Henry VI., and Richard Duke of York, in which the latter was defeated and slain, together with 3,000 of his followers. During the great civil war between Charles and his parliament, Wakefield was frequently the scene of severe contests, being alternately in the hands of both parties. Leland, in speaking of this place as it existed in the time of Henry VIII., says—Wakefeld ys a very quik market-town and meately large: well served of flesh and fische, both from the se and by rivers, whereof divers be thereabout at hande. So that al vitails is very good chepe there. A right honest man shal fare wel for 2 pens a meale. Again—The building of the town is meately faire, most of tymbre, but some of stone. Al the hole profite of the tounne stondith by coarse drapery. The modern town is situated in a very fertile district on the northern border of the river Calder, on a rising ground, and nearly in the centre of the parish, to which it gives its name. It consists of a large number of well-paved and well-lighted streets, lined by excellent shops, and a great number of lofty, highly respectable dwelling-houses, chiefly built of brick. In Wood Street there is a handsome structure, containing a public library and news-room, with apartments for concerts and assemblies. The market-place is not of great extent, but in the centre there is a market-cross, erected in the beginning of the last century; and in the broad street called Westgate, a handsome corn-exchange, with a saloon over it, was built in 1838. Over the Calder there is a bridge of eight arches, supposed to have been built in the time of Edward III. In the centre of the bridge, projecting over the eastern side, there is a chapel, erected by Edward IV., in commemoration of the death of his father and his followers at the battle of Wakefield. This is an elaborate structure in the Gothic style, and has a singularly elegant window overlooking the river. This chapel was dedicated to the Virgin Mary, and endowed with £10 per annum for two chaplains, but at the dissolution, in the reign of Henry VIII., the revenues were confiscated. The living, at one time a rectory, is now a vicarage, in the archd^y and diocese of Ripon; rated at £29. 19s. 2d.; returned, in 1831, at £537. It is in the patronage of the Lord Chancellor. The church, which is situated in Kirkgate, was originally erected in 1329, but has undergone many modern repairs and improvements. It is in a mixed style of architecture, 156 feet in length, by 69 in breadth, with a square embattled tower, and an octagonal spire about 237 feet in height. The interior is very handsome. It consists of a nave and aisles, divided by pointed arches. Between the nave and the chancel is a lofty screen; and at the west end of the nave is a font of considerable antiquity. There is a fine peal of ten bells in the tower.—In 1792, a church, dedicated to St. John, was erected at an expense of £10,000. It was made parochial in 1815. It is an elegant edifice, in a composite Greek style, standing in the centre of St. John Square, and surrounded by an extensive cemetery. The living is a curacy, in the patronage of the Vicar of All Saints. Vicarial tithes commuted in 1793.—There are here two Independent churches, formed in 1782 and 1800; a Presbyterian, in 1751; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1802; and places of worship for the Society of Friends, the Primitive Methodists, the Unitarians, and the Roman Catholics. Here is a free grammar-school for children resident in the town and parish. It was founded by Queen Elizabeth in 1594, and the endowment which now arises from its property exceeds £326 per annum. The school-house is a fine old building, and the site is retired and well chosen. The governors of this school are a corporate body, fourteen in number; and they superintend the distribution of various other bequests and charities connected with the place, which, in 1826, amounted altogether to £2,975. Forty scholars receive a classical education at this school, under two masters; the first of whom has a salary of £160, the other £80. Connected with the same establishment is a writing-school, for admission to which a certain quarterly sum is paid. A lending library is attached to this school. Boys who have been three years in this school are eligible to several exhibitions in the universities. The natives of the town have a preference over those of the parish, and these over residents. Two of these exhibitions are in Clare Hall, Cambridge, and were founded by Thomas Cave; one at Queen's College, Oxford, was founded by Lady Elizabeth Hastings; and three, now of £70 per annum each, to either university, were founded by John Storie in 1764. Dr. Richard Bentley, Dr. John Potter, archbishop of Canterbury, and Dr. John Radcliffe, were educated in this school. The Green-coat school, for 75 boys and 50 girls, and endowed with upwards of £426 per annum, was founded in 1707. In 1722, John Bromley bequeathed property in trust to the governors of the free school, which, in 1825, yielded £736. 3s., for the clothing and apprenticing of poor boys, and to the relief of indigent house-keepers. He also devised other property, which, in 1825, yielded a rental of £100, for the use and benefit of the charity school. The income of Leonard Bates' almshouses, in 1825, was £46; of Cotton Horne's almshouses, £214; of William Horne's almshouses, £149. 10s. James Hutchison's charity produced £106. 10s. in 1825. One-half of this is paid to the master of Fremington school, and the other half distributed among poor cloth-workers. Lady Bolles, in 1662, left £500 interest for educating poor children of Wakefield. Joseph Harrison, in 1825, bequeathed property, yielding an annual income of £225, to be divided yearly among twenty poor men and women, resident in the parish of Wakefield, members of the Established Church. Richard Taylor, in 1686, bequeathed property, now yielding £55 per annum, for clothing and apprenticing poor children of Wakefield. John Foster, in 1670, devised property, now yielding £15 per annum, to the poor of the township of Alverthorpe with Thornes. In 1832, a new seminary of education was founded at Wakefield, under the name of "The West Riding Proprietary School." It bids fair to realise the most sanguine expectations of its projectors. It is attended by about 200 pupils. The property of the school is held in 150 shares of £100, and the average annual expense of each scholar will not, it is calculated, exceed £10. Here are a dispensary and fever-house; also a lunatic asylum for paupers of the west riding. The latter is a handsome structure, erected on East Moor in 1817, and capable of containing 250 patients. There is another asylum for the insane about two miles from the town, capable of accommodating 700 patients. At Stanley and Horbury are mineral springs, possessing qualities similar to those of Harrogate and Cheltenham. The town is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, but it is locally superintended by a chief constable, who is appointed by the inhabitants. The quarter sessions for the west riding, and the petty sessions for the district, are held here; the court-house is a very elegant structure, with a Doric portico. The county house of correction, a very extensive structure, is situated on the margin of a watercourse at the bottom of Westgate. The register-office, and also the office for the clerk of the peace of the county, are both in the town. By the Reform Act, Wakefield became entitled to return one member to parliament, having East Moor, the village of Thornes, and parts of the townships of Alverthorpe and Stanley, included within the limits of the parliamentary borough. This place was formerly noted for its woollen manufacture, and although the trade has declined, the business is still carried on to a considerable extent; but the chief celebrity of Wakefield is derived from its dealings in wool, for which article it is one of the first marts, if not the very first, in the kingdom. —Contains 9,390 acres: 4,970 houses: ass^d prop^r £94,518: poor rates in 1848, £12,209. 13s. —Market day, Friday. tensive views of the sea and the surrounding country, stands the elegant seat of Sir Thomas Reynell, Bart., who derives his immediate descent from Richard Reynell, Esq., an eminent barrister, and one of the direct posterity of Sir Richard Reynell of Ogwell, in the county of Devon, who lived in the time of Richard I. Mr. Reynell having attained to the position of chief-justice of the Court of Common Pleas, was created a baronet in 1678. The great-great-grandson of that gentleman, Sir Richard Littleton, dying without issue, the title devolved upon his brother, the present baronet, a distinguished military commander. Sir Thomas is a general officer in the army, a K.C.B., and of the Royal Guelphic Hanoverian order, and colonel of the 71st Regiment of Foot. Sir Thomas, who served from a very early age with great distinction in the army, in addition to his commandership of the Bath, to which he attained by his services at the siege of Bhurtpore in India, was honoured with the thanks of both houses of parliament, was decorated with the insignia of a knight of the Austrian military order of Maria Theresa, and of the 4th class of the distinguished order of St. George, through the recommendation of his Grace, Field Marshal the Duke of Wellington, immediately after the battle of Waterloo, where Sir Thomas was wounded, when in the command of the 71st Light Infantry. He is also entitled to wear the Turkish medal for his services in Egypt in 1801, when a captain in the 40th Light Infantry.

WALDEN-SAFFRON (or SAFFRON-WALDEN), ESSEX, a market town and parish, locally situated in the hund^{of} of Uttlesford, union of Saffron-Walden: 46 miles from London (coach road 42), 6 from Linton, 7 from Thaxted. — Nor. and East. Co^t. Rail. to Newport station, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 178 miles. — Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 2 p.m.: post closes 10½ a.m. and 9 p.m. — The town of Saffron-Walden is supposed to have derived its appellation from the Saxon word Weald, an extended valley or low ground, surrounded, though at a distance, by elevated country; and the adjunct of Saffron is derived from the once extensive culture of that plant in the neighbourhood. Dr. Stukeley, in speaking of this place, says—"A narrow tongue of land shoots itself out like a promontory, encompassed with a valley in the form of a horse-shoe, enclosed by distant and most delightful hills. On the bottom of the tongue stand the ruins of a castle, and on the top or extremity the church, round which, on the side of the hill and in the valley, is the town built, so that the bottom of the church is as high as the town, and seen above the tops of the houses." Saffron-Walden, which wears a peculiar air of neatness and comfort, consists chiefly of seven streets, from which several small by-ways diverge. The houses, built of lath and plaster, have mostly an old look, and several of them are very ancient; the market-place is spacious, and contains a handsome town-hall. Many of the streets are now paved and well lighted. The trade of the place, beside the supply of domestic necessaries for home consumption, consists to a large extent in the export of corn and other agricultural produce; a very handsome cattle-market was opened here in 1831. The church is a very conspicuous edifice, with a tower rising to 193 feet in height. It consists of a nave, chancel, and side aisles, the interior roofs of which are of timber, and elegantly painted. Several of the windows are richly decorated, and above the communion-table there is a fine copy of Corregio's Holy Family; the burial-place of the Howard family is under the communion-table. The Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, and the Society of Friends, all have chapels here. The free grammar-school was founded in 1525, by Mrs. Johane Bradbury; its present revenue is about £45 a year; the school-house was rebuilt in 1825. The other parochial benefactions are both numerous and important. King Edward's almshouses, which have an income of about £1,000 a year, were rebuilt in 1834, at an expense of about £5,000. Mr. Thomas Turner's charity, founded in 1623, yields £23 per annum; Leader's charity yields £20. 15s. per annum; Thomas Adam's charity, £30 per annum; Bromfield's, £29 per annum; Viscountess Falkland's, £22; and Lord Howard de Walden's, £60 a year; and beside these there are various other minor charities, the bulk of the last of the larger revenues being distributed in clothing to the poor. In the neighbourhood of Saffron-Walden are the remains of a castle, erected soon after the Norman Conquest, by Geoffrey de Mandeville, and in the vicinity there are the traces of an ancient embankment, nearly 700 feet square, the origin of which is not known. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—A priory of Benedictine monks was founded here by Geoffrey Mandeville, the first Earl of Essex after the Conquest, to the honour of St. Mary and St. James, in the year of our Lord 1136. In the time of Richard I. it became an abbey, and was valued, 26 h. Hen. VIII., at £406. 15s. 11d. After the suppression, it was granted to Sir Thomas Audley, who was thereupon created a baron, by the title of Lord Audley of Walden. Upon the site of this monastery, the Earl of Suffolk, in the time of James I., erected that stately mansion called Audley End. This noble edifice, which it required thirteen years to construct, was situated about a mile to the west of the town, was regarded, next to Windsor Castle, as the largest mansion in the kingdom, and though only a small portion now remains, it constitutes the splendid seat of Lord Braybrooke. Saffron-Walden has been incorporated for several centuries; under the municipal reform act, it is governed by a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve common councillors; their public income is about £600 a year. Saffron-Walden is one of the polling-places for the county. Richard Griffin Braybrooke, LL.D., Baron of Braybrooke, hereditary visitor of Magdalene College, Cambridge, recorder of Saffron-Walden, and high steward of Wokingham, derives his immediate descent from Sir Edward Neville of Addington Park, in Kent, second son of George, Lord Abergavenny, who died in 1492, and whose descendant, Sir Henry Neville, was a distinguished person in the times of Elizabeth and James I. Ann, the great-granddaughter of that gentleman, and relict of Richard Rainsford, Esq. of Dallington, and chief-justice of the Court of Common Pleas, married James, second Lord Griffin of Braybrooke Castle, in Northamptonshire. The son of that nobleman, Edward, the third baron of Griffin, died without children, and the barony devolved upon his sisters as co-heirs. Anne, married to William Whitwell, Esq., eventually became sole heiress of her father. Her son, John Whitwell Griffin, Esq., having inherited the property of his aunt, the Countess of Portsmouth, obtained the permission of the Crown to assume the name and arms of Griffin; and having his claim to the ancient barony of Howard de Walden admitted, as the great-grandson and sole heir of Lady Essex Howard, wife of the first Lord Griffin, and only child of James, third baron of Howard de Walden, was summoned to parliament in 1784, as fourth baron of Howard de Walden. From that nobleman, the present peer is a collateral descendant. — The living, a vicarage in the archd^y of Colchester, and diocese of London, is valued at £33. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £237:

10½ a.m.—This place has evidently been the site of the Roman station, for many relics of that people have been found in the town and neighbourhood. The name of Wallingford is supposed to be derived from Wallum or Gualion, into which it was afterwards corrupted, meaning a fortification, or fort, intended, no doubt, to defend a ferry which formerly existed here across the Thames. Subsequently it became a possession of the Saxons, but was taken and burned by the Danes in the year 1006. In the time of Edward the Confessor, it was made a royal borough. Wallingford shared, in full participation, the events which are recorded in the history of England. Wolsey, in his time, obtained a grant of the manor and the castle, and conferred them on Christ College, Oxford. During the parliamentary war, the town was fortified and held by the adherents of the king; but was ultimately dismantled by the parliamentarians in 1653, and a portion of one of the walls only remains, to show its position. Wallingford is situated on the western bank of the river Thames. The streets are neat, well paved, and lighted with gas; the supply of water is abundant, and the stream is here crossed by a bridge, about 900 feet in length, erected in 1809, on the site of the ancient structure, which formed the communication between the town and the country adjacent, on the other side of the river. The borough contains the four parishes of All-Hallows, St. Peter, St. Mary-le-More, and St. Leonard; containing about 340 acres, besides a few acres which are extra-parochial, all in the archd^y of Berks, and diocese of Oxford. The living of All-Hallows—the church of which was demolished in 1648—is a sinecure rectory, in the patronage of the master and fellows of Pembroke College, Oxford. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £289. 4s., belonging to the master and fellows of Pembroke College, and the dean and canons of Windsor.—The living of St. Peter is a disch^d rectory, rated at £6. 1s. 3d., and returned, in 1831, at £100 net value. Patron, in 1841, W. Blackstone, Esq. The church was built in 1769, and in 1777 a square tower and elegant spire were added by subscription. The learned Sir William Blackstone was buried in this church. The living of St. Mary's is a disch^d rectory, rated at £4, and returned, in 1831, at £137 net. Patron, the Lord Chancellor. The church was erected in 1658. The living of St. Leonard's is a disch^d rectory, to which is annexed the perpetual curacy of Sotewell, rated at £7. 12s. 6d., and returned at £153. Patron, the Lord Chancellor. The church is a structure of great antiquity. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1785; a Baptist, in 1794; a Primitive Methodist; and a Friends' meeting-house. There is a free school, in which six boys receive education on an endowment of £10 per annum, founded in 1569 by Walter Bigg of London. Another school was founded in 1672, at an expense of £32. 10s., given by the fraternity of St. John the Baptist, or the Merchant Tailors' Company, London, with an endowment of £2. 10s. for the master. A charity school was established in 1819 by subscription, in which twenty boys and thirty girls receive education and clothing. In 1687, William Angier, and Mary his sister, founded an almshouse for six poor widows, and endowed it with £34 a year. Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—The church of the Holy Trinity, within the west gate here, being given in the time of William I. to the abbey of St. Alban, by Galfredus Camerarius, Paul, the 14th abbot, sent hither a convent of three Black monks, who, with their prior, were subordinate to that great monastery. The yearly revenue of this cell is not to be found in the valuations of the religious houses, 26th Hen. VIII., because Cardinal Wolsey, commendatory abbot of St. Albans, had, before that time, procured the pope's bull for the dissolution of this and other small monasteries, and had their lands bestowed on him by the king, 20th Hen. VIII., with intent that he should settle the same on the famous new college he was about to build in Oxford. But by the forfeiture of that cardinal, that noble design was left unfinished, and this priory, with his other lands, came again to the crown; from whence it was granted, 38th Hen. VIII., to John Norres. There was a dean and prebendaries in the king's free chapel, within the third dyke of the castle here, in the beginning of King John's reign, and probably before, which Edward, earl of Cornwall, 10th Edward I., endowed with lands and rents for the maintenance of six chaplains, six clerks, and four choristers; and its revenues were further augmented by Edward the Black Prince and King Henry VI.; so that, before the dissolution, its yearly income was rated at £147. 8s. This college or free chapel was dedicated to St. Nicholas, and the site was granted, 2d Edward VI., to Michael Stanhope and John Bellew. Wallingford is, indeed, a neat country market town, situated in an extensive agricultural district, of which it is the centre, and to which it supplies, in a variety of ways, the requisites for domestic life and enjoyment. The town was first incorporated in the time of Henry I.; under the municipal reform act, the borough is governed by a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve common councillors, and its bounds have been extended, to comprise the villages of Crowmarsh and Winterbrook, with the Castle precinct; the public income of the corporation is about £420 a year. Petty sessions for the division are held here every Friday. Wallingford was a borough by prescription, and had returned two members to parliament ever since the 23d year of Edward I.; but by the Reform Act it was reduced to one member, and the parishes of Sotewell and Brightwell, with part of the parish of Cholsey and Clapcott liberty adjoining, and also the parishes of North and South Moreton, and parts of Aston-Tirrell and Aston-up-Thorpe in Berkshire, together with the parishes of Crowmarsh, Bensington, and Newnham-Murren, in Oxfordshire, were comprised with it for the purposes of parliamentary representation. Wallingford gives the second title of viscount to the Earl of Banbury. —Contains 370 acres: 485 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 2,500: ass^d prop^y 5,152: poor rates in 1848, £1,181. 7s. Tithes commuted in 1839. —Market days, Tuesday and Friday. Fairs: June 24, for horses; September 29, and December 17, for hogs. —Bankers: Allnat, Hedges, Wells, & Co.—draw on Jones, Lloyd, & Co.; Branch of County of Berks Union Banking Co.—draw on London and Westminster Bank. —George Inn, and Lamb Hotel.

WALLINGTON, SURREY, a hamlet on the banks of the Wandle, in the parish of Beddington—(which see for access, &c.)—union of Croydon: 11 miles from London, 3 from Croydon, 3 from Mitcham. — This was anciently a place of importance, and is still the largest village in the parish. It appears to have been a Roman station, for many relics have been found in the neighbourhood. — Contains 168 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 934: ass^d prop^y £4,542: poor rates in 1848, £299. 16s.

WALLINGTON, NORTHUMBERLAND, a township in the parish of Hartburn—(which see for access, &c.)—union of Morpeth: 294 miles from London, 5 from Hartburn, 14 from Morpeth. — Contains 44 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 167: poor rates in 1848, £60. 11s.

WALLINGWELLS, NOTTINGHAM, an extra-parochial liberty in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of Bassetlaw: 150 miles from London, 4 from Worksop, 4 from Blyth. — Contains 390 acres: 3 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 27. Tithes commuted in 1840.

WALLOP-NETHER, HANTS, a parish in the hun^d. of Thorngate, union of Stockbridge, Andover division of the county: 80 miles from London (coach road 71), 5 from Stockbridge, 8 from Andover. — Sou. West. Rail. to Winchester, thence 13 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Winchester, &c., 168 miles. — Money orders issued at Stockbridge: London letters deliv^d 8½ a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — The church is an ancient Gothic structure, with a tower. The Baptists and Methodists have chapels in the village. The charities consist of the interest of £1,000, left by Dr. Douce in 1760, to be distributed amongst poor persons, and the interest of £600, left by the late Mr. Wm. Warwick in 1823, for the education of poor children. — The living (St. Andrew), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £13. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £294: patrons, Vicars-Choral in York Cathedral: pres. incumbent, W. B. Tate, 1834: contains 5,920 acres: 161 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 949: ass^d prop^y £6,433: poor rates in 1848, £472. 15s. Tithes commuted in 1840. — Wallop House, a very pleasing demesne, is the seat of Bradford Wilmore, Esq.

WALLOP-OVER, HANTS, a parish in the hun^d. of Thorngate, union of Stockbridge, Andover division of the county: 71 miles from London, 7 from Stockbridge, 11 from Salisbury. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — The church is an ancient structure. The parochial charities produce about £8 a year. — The living (St. Peter), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £27. 5s. 2½d.: pres. net income, £398: patron, Earl of Portsmouth: pres. incumbent, H. Wake, 1813: contains 5,920 acres: 95 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 481: ass^d prop^y £3,497: poor rates in 1848, £153. 12s.

WALLSEND, NORTHUMBERLAND, a parish in the eastern division of the ward of Castle, union of Tynemouth, containing the townships of Howden-Pans, Wallsend, and Willington: 297 miles from London (coach road 279), 4 from Newcastle, 4 from North Shields. — Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, and York, to Newcastle, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 175 miles. — Money orders issued at Newcastle: London letters deliv^d 11 a.m.: post closes 9 p.m. — The name of the place is evidently derived from its position at the end of the wall of the Roman emperor Severus, and during his subsequent times was called Legedurum, from its being a principal depot for corn. The village, which stands near the road to Shields, is large and well built, contains several good houses, and has a green in the centre. The original parish church has been removed, but a new edifice was erected about the year 1809, at an expense of about £5,000. The Presbyterians, Wesleyan Methodists, and the members of the Scotch Free Church, all have chapels here. The neighbourhood is remarkable for its extensive beds of excellent coal, as many as 2,500,000 tons being raised in a year; but many of the inhabitants are also employed in the manufacture of copperas and earthenware. There are also some extensive limekilns near the town. The author of a local history informs us of a curious phenomena which occurs here. He says—"Not far from Wallsend church, a four-inch pipe, connected at the pit bottom with an insulated portion of coal strata, extending about four acres, is carried up as high as the head-gear; from the orifice of this tube there constantly issues an ignited stream of gas, forming a flag of flame, at least eight or nine feet in length. At night—and indeed during the day—this is conspicuous to a considerable distance; and on approaching the spot, such is the force with which the inflammable vapour is emitted, that it produces a sound like the roaring of a blast furnace. The immense natural gasometer in which this tremendous agent is collected, supplies the flame at the rate of eleven hogsheads per minute! There is a similar emission at Willington colliery—the discharge is most vehement when the wind blows from the south-east." Mr. Lyell calculates that ten times as much gas is evolved annually by this pipe, as is used in illuminating the large town of Sheffield. About a mile to the south of Walls-end is the village of Carville, where the celebrated painter, Mr. John Martin, was born.---The living (Holy Cross) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham: pres. net income, £289: patron, Dean and Chapter of Durham: pres. incumbent, J. Armstrong, 1830: contains 2,560 acres: 984 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,758: do. in 1851, 5,358: ass^d prop^y £54,576: poor rates in 1848, £1,396. 4s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

WALMER, KENT, a parish in the hun^d. of Cornillo, union of Eastry, lathe of St. Augustine: 103 miles from London (coach road 71), 6 from Dover, 1 from Deal.---Sou. East. Rail. through Ashford to Deal, thence 1 mile: from Derby, through London, &c., 235 miles.---Money orders issued at Dover: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 10 p.m.---This was anciently a non-corporated member of the port of Sandwich, but was, in 1699, incorporated with Deal by a charter of separation. The church is partly in the style of Norman architecture. Some small charities belong to the parish. Walmer is much frequented for the purpose of sea-bathing, and therefore contains many good houses, and several pleasing marine villas. Close to the sea-shore stands Walmer Castle, which was erected by Henry VIII. about the same time as he built those of Deal and Sandown, for the defence of the coast. It is the official residence of the lord warden of the Cinque Ports, and has been furnished appropriately for a person of his high rank. It commands fine views of the Downs, and that end of the English Channel.---The living (St. Mary) is a perpetual curacy, with St. Saviour's curacy, in the archd^y and diocese of Canterbury: pres. net income, £240: patron, Archbishop of Canterbury: pres. incumbent, W. B. Holland, 1843: contains 730 acres: 343 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,170: do. in 1851, 2,470: ass^d prop^y £4,053: poor rates in 1848, £585. 8s.

WALMERSLEY, LANCASTER, a township and chapelry in the parish and union of Bury---(which see for access, &c.): 198 miles from London, 4 from Bury, 7 from Rochdale.---Money orders issued at Bury: London letters deliv^d. 9½ a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m.---The Independents have a chapel in the village. The charities produce about £10 a year. Cotton-spinning is largely carried on in the village, and there are some extensive coal-mines in the neighbourhood.---Contains 3,090 acres: 584 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,880: do. in 1851, 5,480: ass^d prop^y £5,821: poor rates in 1848, £515. 13s.

WALNEY (ISLE OF), LANCASTER, a chapelry in the parish of Dalton-in-Furness---(which see for access, &c.)---hun^d of Lonsdale, north of the Sands: 281 miles from London, 5 from Dalton, 10 from Ulverston.---Money orders issued at Ulverston: London letters deliv^d. 1½ p.m.: post closes 4 p.m.---The island stretches from north-west to south-east, and, at its extremity, almost touches the main land, so that there is a road to it across the Sands. In his antiquities of Furness, West thus describes it:---"From Hawcoat, the look-down is on the Isle of Walney, the counterscarf of Furness, once covered with woods, now almost without a tree or shrub. The Isle of Walney lies on a bed of moss; and all round the island, moss is found by digging through a layer of sand and clay which covers it; and in the moss large trees have been taken up. As it is only an island at high-water, an industrious people would long since have joined it to the land by a sea-bank. The abbots of Furness charged themselves with the support of a dyke for its defence; but since the suppression of the abbey, the dyke has been neglected, and the sea has ravaged great part of it, and threatens more. The island is about ten miles in length and one in breadth, and has the appearance of a bank or wall in the sea, hence it was called by the Saxons Waghney, Woney, or Walney, 'a walled island.' It contains two hamlets, Biggar and Scale. The strong castle of the 'Pile of Fowdrey' stands on the northern extremity of the island, and is also insulated at high-water." The Pile of Fowdrey was erected in 1327 by the abbot of Furness, for the protection of the inner harbour. It was formerly a place of great strength, and the remains still make an imposing appearance. There are several intermittent springs on the island, which, though their waters are perfectly fresh, ebb and flow with the tide.---The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to Dalton-in-Furness.

WALPOLE, SUFFOLK, a parish in the hun^d and union of Blything, comprising the hamlet of Cross-keys: 109 miles from London (coach road 97), 3 from Halesworth, 8 from Saxmundham.---East. Co^t. Rail. to Mellis station, thence 18 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, and Norwich, to Mellis, &c., 207 miles.---Money orders issued at Halesworth: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m.---There is an independent chapel in the village.---The living (St. Andrew), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £11: pres. net income, £85: patron, Church Patronage Society: pres. incumbent, Robert Kemp, 1840: contains 1,750 acres: 134 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 615: ass^d prop^y £1,927: poor rates in 1848, £335. 3s.

WALPOLE-ST.-ANDREW, NORFOLK, a parish in the Marshland division of the hund^d. of Freebridge, union of Wisbeach: 101 miles from London (coach road 100), 9 from Lynn-Regis, 7 from Wisbeach. — Nor. and East. Co^r. The church, which is an ancient edifice, was renovated in 1811. — The living (St. Andrew), a vicarage in the archd^y. and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £26. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £1,259: patron, Rev. C. H. Townshend: pres. incumbent, R. Hankinson, 1808: contains 3,150 acres: 97 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 565: poor rates in 1848, £461. Tithes commuted in 1839.

WALPOLE-ST.-PETER, NORFOLK, a parish in the Marshland division of the hund^d. of Freebridge, union of Wisbeach: 99 miles from London, 6 from Sutton-St.-Michael, 6 from Wisbeach. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.)

— The village is long and scattered, but the church is truly considered to be one of the handsomest of the parochial churches in England. It was built in the reign of Henry VI., and consists of a nave, chancel, side aisles, and four embattled towers, with thirteen clerestory windows, which contain some fine specimens of stained glass. It stands within a few hundred yards of St. Andrew's church. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in the village. The parochial charities are very valuable, producing as much as £223 per annum, which amount is distributed in various benevolent ways. — The living (St. Peter), a rectory in the archd^y. and diocese of Norwich, with the curacy of St. Edmund's, is valued at £24: pres. net income, £925: patron, the Crown: pres. incumbent, A. Moore, 1839: contains 5,120 acres: 232 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 1,335: do. in 1851, 1530: ass^d. prop^y. £16,799: poor rates in 1848, £530. Tithes commuted in 1839.

WALRIDGE, NORTHUMBERLAND, a township in the parish of Stainfordham—(which see for access, &c.) — Popⁿ. in 1841, 4. Tithes commuted in 1839.

WALSALL, STAFFORD, a borough, market town, and parish, in the southern division of the hund^d. of Offlow, union of Walsall: it comprises the chapelry of Bloxwich, and township of Walsall-Foreign, as distinguished from Walsall-Borough: 122 miles from London (coach road 119), 9 from Birmingham, 7 from Wolverhampton. — Nor. West. Rail. through Birmingham to Walsall station: from Derby, through Birmingham to Walsall, &c., 51 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m. and 4 p.m.: post closes 7½ a.m. and 7½ p.m. — The name of this place is believed to have originated within the precincts or in the neighbourhood of the forest, in which the Druids celebrated their rites of worship. It was fortified by Ethelfleda, daughter of Alfred the Great, and at the time of the Norman Conquest was a royal demesne. It went afterwards to Dudley, Duke of Northumberland, and after passing through several hands, on his attainder, in the time of Queen Mary, came into the possession of Richard Wilbraham, Esq., who purchased it for £1,000, and one of whose heiresses conveyed it by marriage to the Bridgman family. The town, which consists of several handsome streets, with many good houses and admirable public edifices, is situated on a bold eminence, at the foot of which there is a small stream, which falls into the river Tame. Most of the inhabitants are engaged in the manufacture of the hardware articles required in the coachmaking and saddlery businesses, and Walsall is now considered to be the second manufacturing town in the county. There are, however, several extensive coal mines and limestone quarries in the neighbourhood, the Hayhead limestone being esteemed as remarkably fine. The living is a vicarage in the archd^y. of Stafford, and diocese of Lichfield; rated at £10. 19s. 7d.; net value in 1831, £368; patron, the Earl of Bradford. The church, which stands on a commanding site at the head of High Street, was almost entirely rebuilt in 1821, at an expense of £20,000, and contains 2,426 sittings. It is a handsome cruciform structure, in the later style of English architecture, having several chapels in the aisles. The tower in the south-west angle, and the chancel, belonged to the previous ancient structure. A handsome chapel was erected in 1826, at a cost of about £3,000, by the governors of the grammar-school, to which it is annexed. The living is a perpetual curacy, not in charge, and in the patronage of the governors of the grammar-school. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics, all have chapels here. The free grammar-school was founded and endowed in 1554, by Queen Mary, who placed it under the control of certain governors, to whom she granted a charter of incorporation, and endowed it with certain lands, yielding a rental, in 1833, of £418. The school is open to all boys of the parish, and the total income is about £800 per annum. There are four masters, the first of whom is minister of St. Paul's chapel, and receives a total salary of £220 per annum; the other masters have respectively the salaries of £100, £80, and £60. The remainder of the funds are appropriated towards the support of an English free school for 120 boys, on the National system, and also a preparatory school for children of both sexes, who are taught by two schoolmistresses. A National school, erected in 1820, and chiefly supported by subscription, has been incorporated with the Blue-coat charity school, in which 25 children of each sex receive education on an endowment of £19. 4s. Here are also various Sunday schools, one of which is endowed with £12 per annum. Here are almshouses, erected by the corporation in 1825, at an expense of £400, for eleven poor women, each of whom receives 2s. per week; also almshouses for six aged widows, founded in the reign of James I., and endowed with £42 per annum, by John Harper and others. The endowment of these almshouses consists of the dole of one penny, which was wont to be paid by the corporation, on the eve of the Epiphany, to every person in the parishes of Rushall and Walsall. This dole was paid from the rental of a manor and estates in the county of Warwick, given to the corporation in the reign of Henry VIII. by Thomas Moseley of Bascot. Here are also various charitable bequests for the apprenticing of children, and others for the relief of the poor. Of the former, the Fishleigh or Fishley charity, in 1838, produced £44. 10s. The theatre, and the edifice for the subscription library and news-room, are handsome buildings. The trade of the town is much facilitated by an extension of the Birmingham and Grand Junction Canals, the former of which runs up to it, and the latter not more than a mile distant. Walsall was first incorporated in the time of Henry IV., who granted its inhabitants several privileges; among others, a freedom from toll throughout England, and an exemption from the liability to serve on juries beyond the limits of their own borough. Under the municipal act, Walsall is governed by a mayor, four aldermen, and twelve common councillors. The town-hall is an ancient building, and in it the courts are held, and the public business transacted. The high sheriff of the county appoints a steward and constables, and other officers are appointed at an annual court-leet, held by the lord of the manor. Walsall is a polling-place for the southern division of the county, and returns one member to parliament. The living is valued at £10. 19s. 7d.: contains 100 acres: 1,269 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £6,692: poor rates in 1848, £1,154. 18s. Market day, Tuesday. Fairs: February 24, and Tuesday before Michaelmas, for horses. Bankers: Branch of Birmingham Banking Co.—draw on Glyn, Halifax, & Co.—Dragon and New Inns, and George Hotel.

WALSALL-FOREIGN, STAFFORD, a township in the above parish, including the western and southern parts of the town itself, and a number of villages and hamlets stretching northwards: 119 miles from London, 5 from Bilston, 3 from Wednesbury. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) Contains 7,820 acres: 1,616 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 7,395: do. in 1851, 8,395: ass^d. prop^r. £10,231: poor rates in 1848, £1,770. 18s.

WALSDEN, LANCASTER, a township in the parish of Rochdale—(which see for access, &c.): 204 miles from London, 6 from Rochdale, 10 from Burnley.

WALSHAM (NORTH), NORFOLK, a market town and parish in the hun^d. of Tunstead, union of Erpingham: 128 miles from London (coach road 125), 14 from Norwich, 7 from Aylsham. East. Co^r. Rail. to Norwich, thence 14 miles: from Derby, through Syston and Peterborough to Norwich, &c., 180 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 9½ a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m. The town is agreeably situated on an upland, rising from the river Ant, which flows about a mile to the north, and is navigable all the way to Yarmouth. It consists chiefly of three streets, which diverge from a central area, in which there is a fine market-cross, erected in the reign of Edward VI. by Bishop Thirlby. The church, which is a spacious structure, 156 feet in length, contains a fine monument to Sir William Paston, Knt., who left £50 a year, in various benefactions, to the parish. It also has a very beautiful font. The Wesleyan Methodists, Primitive Methodists, Independents, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. The grammar-school was founded in 1606 by Sir William Paston; its endowment, from his benefaction, and from other sources, now amounts to about £280 per annum. The school was rebuilt in 1765; and it was here that Admiral Lord Nelson received a great part of his early education. In the year 1600, a terrible fire occurred here, which consumed, it is believed, upwards of £20,000 worth of property. Petty sessions for the division are held here every week, and the Bishop of Norwich and Lord Suffolk hold courts leet and baron annually. About a mile to the south of the town there is a lofty stone cross, erected to commemorate a victory obtained by Bishop Spencer over 50,000 rebels under John Litester, a dyer of Norwich, in 1381. The living (St. Mary), a vicarage, with the rectory of Antingham, in the archd^y. of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £8: pres. net income, £336: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, W. F. Wilkinson, 1818: contains 4,010 acres: 560 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,655: do. in 1851, 3,050: ass^d. prop^r. £6,253: poor rates in 1848, £1,134. 14s. Market day, Thursday. Fair: Ascension day, for cattle.

WALSHAM (SOUTH), NORFOLK, a considerable village and district in the hun^d. of Walsham, union of Blofield: 118 miles from London, 13 from North Walsham, 3 from Acle. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) The two parish churches are in one churchyard. The road, which runs through the village to Yarmouth, determines the boundaries of the two parishes. The charities produce about £20 a year. The living (St. Lawrence), a rectory in the archd^y. and diocese of Norwich, with the vicarage of St. Mary, is valued at £13. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £376: patron, Queen's College, Cambridge: pres. incumbent, John Toplis, 1824: contains 3,056 acres: 90 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 225: ass^d. prop^r. £4,435: poor rates in 1848, £404. 7s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

WALSHAM-IN-THE-WILLOWS, SUFFOLK, a parish in the hun^d. of Blackbourne, union of Stow: 77 miles from London (coach road 82), 9 from Stowmarket, 5 from Ixworth. Nor. and East. Co^r. Rail. through Chesterford to Stowmarket, thence 9 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, and Cambridge, to Stowmarket, &c., 155 miles. Money orders issued at Stowmarket: London letters deliv^d. 10 a.m.: post closes 4 p.m. The town estates produce about £90 a year. The living is a perpetual curacy, in the diocese of Ely: pres. net income, £93: patron, S. Golding, Esq.: pres. incumbent, J. T. Sarotan, 1813: contains 2,760 acres: 134 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,265: do. in 1851, 1,419: ass^d. prop^r. £3,661: poor rates in 1848, £557. 10s.

WALSHEFORD, WEST RIDING, YORK, a joint township with Great Ribston, in the parish of Hunsingore—(which see for access, &c.): 198 miles from London, 4 from Wetherby, 6 from Knaresborough.

WALSINGHAM (GREAT), or OLD WALSINGHAM, NORFOLK, a parish in the northern division of the hun^d. of Greenhoe, union of Walsingham: it contains the united parishes of All Saints and St. Peter: 144 miles from London (coach road 124), 1 from New Walsingham, 4 from Wells. Nor. and East. Co^r. Rail. through Ely and East Dereham to Fakenham, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, Ely, &c., 164 miles.

Money orders issued at Fakenham: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 3.40 p.m. The church is an old Gothic structure, remarkable for its beautiful proportions. The charities produce about £13 a year. The Walsingham poor-law union comprises 50 parishes, with a population of about 22,000 persons, spread over an area of 121 square miles. The living (St. Peter), united with Little Walsingham, forming a donative curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £18. 2s. 9d.: pres. net income, £168: patron, Rev. D. H. Lee Warner: pres. incumbent, H. J. Lee Warner, 1835: contains 2,170 acres: 94 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 426: ass^d prop^y £2,728: poor rates in 1848, £227. 6s. Tithes commuted in 1808.

WALSINGHAM (LITTLE), or NEW WALSINGHAM, NORFOLK, a parish and market town in the northern division of the hund^d. of Greenhoo, union of Walsingham: 113 miles from London, 6 from Fakenham, 12 from Holt. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) This, during the Roman Catholic times, was one of the most celebrated places in the county for the shrine of "Our Lady of Walsingham," and was visited by pilgrims from all parts of the country; among whom were several of the royal race, Henry VIII. even, in the second year of his reign, walking hither barefoot from the town of Barsham. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—Here was an house of Franciscan or Grey friars, founded about the year 1346, by Elizabeth de Burgo, countess of Clare, the foundress of Clare Hall in Cambridge. It had houses and gardens valued at £3 per annum, which, with the site of the friary, were granted, 36th Henry VIII., to John Eyer. Robert Pigot of Little Walsingham, by his will, dated 1492, gave an house in or near this town for the use of two leprous persons of good families; and from that time the hospital or lazear-house of Walsingham is often mentioned in the old will-books. The famous chapel here, dedicated to the Annunciation of Our Lady, was built A.D. 1061, by the widow of Richoldis de Favarchis, in imitation of that of Nazareth, and therein was placed a prior and convent of Black canons, by her son Geoffrey, in the time of William the Conqueror, by whose endowment, and that of other benefactors, the possessions belonging to this monastery were raised to £446. 14s. 4d. per annum, besides the offerings to Our Lady, valued in our manuscript at £260. 12s. 4d. per annum, but in another to £26. 15s. only. The site of this religious house was granted, 31st Henry VIII., to Thomas Sidney. Judging from the recorded amount of the offerings, this shrine must have been as noted in its day as that of the celebrated Lady of Loretto, or of St. Thomas à Becket at Canterbury. The parish church of Walsingham is a large cruciform structure, with a spire. It contains some very ancient and interesting monuments, and a curious font, on which are carved representations of the seven sacraments of the Romish church, together with one of the crucifixion. The Wesleyan Methodists and Independents have chapels in the village. The free grammar-school was founded in 1639, by Mr. Richard Bond, and has now an income of about £130 a year. Mr. Bond also left £63 a year to the poor. The other charities produce about £110 a year. The noble family of De Grey take the title of baron from this place. The living (St. Mary)—(for ecclesiastical returns see above)—contains 860 acres: 227 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 1,170: ass^d prop^y £2,553: poor rates in 1848, £405. 1s. Tithes commuted in 1808. Markot day, Friday. Fair, fourteen days after Whit-Monday. Black Lion Inn. In the beautiful grounds of Waltham Abbey, which is now the seat of the Rev. Daniel Henry Lee Warner, there are some interesting remains of the old structure. This rev. gentleman, one of whose ancestors was speaker of the House of Commons that restored Charles II., is the representative of the ancient family of Lee of Cotton, in Shropshire.

WALSOKEN, NORFOLK, a parish in the Marshland division of the hund^d. of Freebridge, union of Wisbeach: 96 miles from London (coach road 94), 1 from Wisbeach, 13 from Lynn. Nor. and East. WALTHAM ABBEY (or HOLY CROSS), ESSEX, a parish and market town in the hund^d of Waltham, union of Edmonton: 15 miles from London (coach road 13), 6 from Epping, 7 from Hoddesdon. — Nor. and East. Co^r. Rail. to Waltham station: from Derby, through London, &c., 147 miles. — London letters deliv^d. three times each way daily. — The town, which is irregularly built, is situated on the river Lea, which here divides into different streams, and is surrounded by water meadows, long celebrated for the nourishing qualities of their grass. These streams are traditionally asserted to flow in the channels cut by Alfred the Great, when he diverted the water, in order to leave the Danish fleet on dry ground. They are now chiefly occupied for the purposes of the Government gunpowder mills, but there are also several malt-kilns, a pin manufactory, and a silk mill here. The neighbouring country, especially on the Essex side, is exceedingly beautiful. The name of the place is said to be derived from the Saxon term Weald-ham, a meadow, or meadow ground in a low situation. Its addition of Holy Cross is said to be derived from a cross with a figure of our Saviour upon it, which was brought from Montacute. Epping Forest once took its name from this place. Mr. Farmer, in his topographical history, gives the following account of the foundation of the celebrated abbey here. "Tovi, standard-bearer of Canute, had a son named Athelstan, who proved a prodigal, and quickly spent all the goods and great estates which his father had got together; so that by some transaction this place returned to the Crown. Edward the Confessor then bestowed Waltham, with the lands thereabouts, on Harold, his brother-in-law, then only an earl, and son to Earl Godwin, who immediately built and endowed here a monastery. It is further stated by this author, that each of the canons had one manor appropriated for his support, and that the dean had six, making in all seventeen. Harold is commonly stated by historians to have been killed at the battle of Hastings, and interred in Waltham Abbey, where, during a long period, a tomb was shown as the sepulchral monument of the last of our Saxon kings. Mr. Palgrave seems to consider the tomb at Waltham as merely a cenotaph; but Fuller, in his 'Church History,' gives a circumstantial account of the opening of this monument towards the end of Elizabeth's reign, and the discovery within it of the skeleton of a man. William the Norman—as might have been expected—showed little favour to the religious foundation of his vanquished rival. He forcibly took away from the church of Holy Cross a quantity of valuable plate, gems, and rich vestments; but seems to have left the canons in possession of all their estates and revenues. Henry II. dissolved the foundation at Waltham, on account of the lewdness and debauchery of the canons. Guido Rufus, the last dean of Waltham, resigned his deanery in 1177 to the king's commissioners. This preliminary proceeding having taken place, the king visited Waltham on the eve of Pentecost, when sixteen regular canons of the order of St. Augustine, namely, six of Cirencester, six of Oseney, and four of Chich, were inducted into the church; and Walter de Gaunt, a canon of Oseney, was constituted the first abbot of the new foundation. The church was at the same time declared exempt from episcopal jurisdiction; and Pope Lucius III. subsequently by his bull confirmed this exemption. Henry II. not only confirmed to the canons their right to the lands given by Harold and others, but added to their possessions the manors of Siwardston and Epping. Richard I. gave a new charter, bestowing on the canons his whole manor of Waltham, with the great wood and park called Harold's Park, 300 acres of assart land, the market of Waltham, the village of Nasing, a member of Waltham, and 160 acres of assart land there,—they paying yearly to his exchequer £60, in lieu of all services." At the dissolution of the monastic institutions, the gross amount of the revenues was, according to Dugdale, £900. 3s. 4d. Waltham was one of those convents the superiors of which were mitred barons, and entitled to a seat in parliament; and the building was one of the finest and most extensive Norman edifices in the kingdom. The present church was formerly the nave of the old abbey church. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels in the village. The parochial charities are very various and munificent. The resident gentry here are very numerous. — The living (Holy Cross and St. Laurence), a donative curacy, a peculiar of the diocese of London, is valued at £100: pres. net income, £237: patron, Trustees of the Earl of Norwich: pres. incumbent, J. Francis: contains 11,870 acres: 780 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,177: do in 1851, 4,250: ass^d. prop^r. £24,886: poor rates in 1848, £1,880. 14s. — Market day, Tuesday. Fairs: May 14, and September 25 and 26.

WALTHAM-BISHOP'S, HANTS, a parish and market town in the hund^d of Bishop's-Waltham, union of Droxford, Portsdown division of the county: 83 miles from London, 10 from Southampton. — Sou. West. Rail. through Bishopstoke to Botley, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, Reading, and Bishopstoke, to Botley, &c., 170 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. — The town is situated on the high road from Winchester to Portsmouth, in the midst of a fine and very fertile country, and is neatly built. The river Humble has its source about half a mile from the town, running through a piece of water called Waltham

Pond, which was once a beautiful lake, but from the accretion of rush and alluvial soil is now worthy of no better name than that which it bears. On its banks are the remains of the once magnificent palace of the bishops of Winchester. It was originally erected by Bishop Henry de Blois, brother of King Stephen, but was afterwards altered, repaired, enlarged, and greatly embellished by William of Wyckham, to whom most of its architectural richness is to be ascribed, and who died here at the age of eighty years. The outer court, which, according to Leland, was built by Bishop Langton, is now used as a farmyard. Most of the outer walls of the great hall, which was of large dimensions, and of the tower, now remain; they are mantled with ivy. — The living (St. Peter), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £26. 12s. 8½d.: pres. net income, £915: patron, Bishop of Winchester: pres. incumbent, W. Brock, 1833: contains 5,020 acres: 523 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,193: do. in 1851, 2,496: ass^d. prop^r. £4,809: poor rates in 1848, £952. 15s. Tithes commuted in 1840. — Market day, Friday. WALTHAM-CROSS, HERTFORD, a ward in the parish of Cheshunt-St. Mary, in the hund^d. of Hertford: 11 miles from London, 2 from Waltham Abbey, 4 from Enfield. — London letters deliv^d. three times each way daily. — This place derives its name from the erection of a handsome cross, erected here by Edward I., as at other places, in affectionate commemoration of the resting of the body of his faithful Queen Eleanor, on its journey from Lincolnshire to Westminster, where she was buried. The last of these memorials was erected at Charing-cross. The cross at Waltham, which had been much injured by the action of time and the elements, has lately been beautifully restored. — The living is a perpetual curacy, the patronage being vested in the trustees of the Earl of Norwich.

WALTHAM (GREAT), ESSEX, a parish in the hund^d. and union of Chelmsford: the parish includes the hamlet of North-End: 33 miles from London, 4 from Chelmsford, 7 from Dunmow. — East. Co. The Independents have a chapel in the village. One of the schools here is supported by endowments bequeathed by Sir Henry Maynard and Sir George Monox. A valuable institution has, within these few years, been established for the subsistence and education of the daughters of missionaries. Almshouses for thirteen poor persons were founded here by Sir H. Maynard, which he, Mr. Richard Banks, and William Bedford, Esq., endowed with ample funds. In 1797, Mrs. Mary Squires founded almshouses for six poor widows, and endowed them with an income of £78 per annum. Beside these, there are several other charitable bequests. In the neighbourhood of the town, which forms part of Epping Forest, there are several pleasing villas and suburban residences of the wealthier classes. — The living (St. Mary), a vicarage in the diocese of London—besides this there are three perpetual curacies, St. John's, St. Peter's, and St. James's, all in the patronage of the vicar, Rev. W. Wilson, D.D.—is valued at £13. 6s. 8d.: pres. incumbent, W. Wilson, 1822: contains 3,690 acres: 750 houses: ass^d. prop^y. £24,507: poor rates in 1848, £2,255. 8s.

VOL. III.

Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—Roger Bigod the first, before the death of King Rufus, gave the church of St. Felix here to the monastery of Rochester, who quickly settled therein a cell of their own Benedictine monks, which continued till 10th September, 1528, when it was suppressed, and in December following given to Cardinal Wolsey, toward the better endowment of his colleges; 23d Henry VIII. it was granted to Thomas Duke of Norfolk; 26th Henry VIII. to the priory of Thetford; and 19th Elizabeth, to Thomas Sekford. And Mr. Grose also says, "Walton Castle formerly stood on a high cliff in Felixstow, at the distance of one mile from the mouth of Woodbridge river, and two miles from Orwell haven. Its remains, in 1766, were only visible at near low water, the sea having gained so considerably on this coast as to wash away the cliff on which it stood. A gentleman living about that time remembered the ruins of the castle to have stood at least 50 yards within the extremity of the cliff. Tradition reports this to have been one of the Roman fortresses, erected by Constantine the Great when he withdrew his legions from the frontier towns in the east of Britain, and built forts and castles to supply the want of them. There can be no doubt but Walton Castle was a Roman fortification, as appears from the great variety of Roman urns, rings, coins, &c., that have been found there. The coins that have lately been taken up here are of Vespasian and Antonine, Severus, and his successors, to Gordian III., and from Gallenus down to Arcadius and Honorius. It is certain the castle had the privilege of coining money, for several dies have been found for that purpose. Here, Holinshed informs us, the Earl of Leicester landed with his Flemings in 1173, and was received by Hugh Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, then lord of the manor and castle of Walton; and in 1176," says the same author, "Henry the Second causes all such castles as has been kept against him during the time of that rebellion, and Walton among the rest, to be overthrown and made plain with the ground; and this was so effectually done, that to prevent its ever rising again, the stones of it were carried into all parts of Felixstow, Walton, and Trimley, and footpaths were paved with them on both sides of the roads; in many places they still remain entire, and some fragments are to be met with in all; at same time the castle of Ipswich was demolished."—The living (St. Mary), a disch^d. vicarage, to which is annexed that of Felixstow in the archd^y of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £4. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £290: patron, Rev. Rail. to Colchester, thence 19 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 202 miles. —Money orders issued at Colchester: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. —The village is romantically situated on a cliff overhanging the sea, is much frequented as a watering-place, the beach forming a delightful promenade, and affording peculiar facilities for enjoyment, as the tide ebbs to a considerable distance, leaving a smooth beautiful sand for miles along the margin of the sea; the coast is famous for its fossils. The place is well furnished with excellent hotels and lodging-houses, libraries, and reading-rooms, and the crescent pier forms an excellent promenade, 300 feet in length and 14 in width; the steamers can land and embark passengers at this pier at high water. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels here. The parish formerly extended much farther, ruins of the old place having been found as far as five miles from the shore. A new church was built here in 1804 by Bishop Porteous; the old structure, together with the churchyard and a number of dwellings, have been swept away by an incursion of the waves. The proceeds of a rent-charge of 35 acres of land, left by Mr. John Sadler in 1563, is divided amongst the poor. On a lofty cliff, commonly called the Naze, the commissioners of the Trinity House have erected a brick tower 80 feet high, which serves as a land-mark for vessels making their way to, or departing from, the port of Harwich; from the summit of this structure very extensive views are obtained. —The living (All Saints) is a disch^d. vicarage, annexed to that of Kirby-le-Soken: contains 2,200 acres: 90 houses: ass^d. prop^y. £2,389: poor rates in 1848, £67.

WALTON-ON-THAMES, SURREY, a parish in the first division of the hund^d. of Elmbridge, union of Chertsey; containing the divisions of Commonsides, Hersham, Burnwood, and Town; Hersham is a large village near Esher: 17 miles from London (coach road 16), 2 from Weybridge, 6 from Staines. —Sou. West. Rail. to Walton station: from Derby, through London, &c., 149 miles. —Money orders issued at Esher: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. —There is a bridge here across the Thames, erected in 1787; it is a brick structure, and consists of four principal arches, with several smaller ones on either side. The church, which is an ancient structure, contains several fine monuments; one of them, to the memory of Viscount Shannon, by Roubilliac, is particularly worthy of notice. The celebrated astrologer, William Lilly, resided at Hersham, where he died in 1681. It is in this parish that Cæsar crossed the Thames in pursuit of Cassibelanus, at a place called Coway-stakes, so termed, it is believed, from sharp stakes having been driven into the bed of the river by the Britons to impede the advance of the Roman troops. Among the several fine mansions and pleasing villas by which the neighbourhood is so delightfully embellished, is Appscourt, held on the curious custom of distributing a barrel of cider and a loaf of bread on the 13th of November annually, among such travellers as may require such refreshment on that day. —The living (St. Mary), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £12. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £209: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, Thomas Hatch, 1816: contains 6,280 acres: 420 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,537: do. in 1851, 2,840: ass^d. prop^y. £11,522: poor rates in 1848, £1,229. 5s. —Fair: Easter week, for horses. —Appscourt is the seat of Richard Sharpe, Esq.—Mount Felix, also a very fine domain, is the seat of the Right Hon. the Earl of Tankerville, Baron Ossulston of Ossulston, in Middlesex, who derives his immediate descent from Thomas Bennet, Esq. of Clapcott, whose grandson, Sir John Bennet, Knt., LL.D., of Dawley, in the county of Middlesex, was a distinguished member of parliament in the time of Queen Elizabeth, and subsequently was made Chancellor to Anne, Queen of James I., judge of the prerogative court of Canterbury, and chancellor to the Archbishop of York. That gentleman had two sons, the second of whom was raised to the peerage in 1663 by the titles of Viscount Thetford and Earl of Arlington. John, the eldest son, was, in 1682, created Baron Ossulston of Ossulston; and in 1714, his lordship's eldest son, Charles, the second baron, was elevated to the extinct dignity of his father-in-law, the earldom of Tankerville. Of that nobleman the present peer is a direct descendant.—Burwood Park is the seat of Sir Richard Frederic, Bart., the descendant of an eminent merchant, Sir John Frederic, Knt., who was lord mayor of London in 1662. Sir John was president of Christ's Hospital, having been a liberal benefactor to that institution, the hall of which he built after the great fire solely at his own cost of £5,000, while he greatly promoted the formation of a mathematical school. The grandson of that wealthy citizen, John Frederic, Esq., was created a baronet in 1723, and of him the present representative of the family is a direct descendant.

Rail. to Ilford, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 141 miles. — London letters deliv^d 4 times each way daily. — The church is a fine Grecian structure, having a nave, side aisles, and a chancel: the window of the latter being filled with beautiful stained glass, representing our Saviour bearing the cross, after the altar-piece in the chapel of Magdalene College, Oxford. In 1841, the foundation of a new Infant Orphan Asylum was laid here by His Royal Highness Prince Albert, and when this ceremony was over, more than 400 ladies each laid down a purse containing not less than £5. 5s. upon the corner stone. Thus nearly £3,000 was at once collected, a sum which was largely increased by subsequent benefactions. The institution was founded to nurse, clothe, and instruct orphans under seven years of age, and to sustain them until they are old enough to be admitted into other asylums, where only children of a more advanced age are admitted. The site chosen is a very beautiful one, near the Eagle at Snarebrook. The parish contains many handsome houses, the abodes of merchants, and other affluent men of business in London. — The living (St. Mary), a rectory in the archd^y. of Essex, and diocese of London, is valued at £6. 13s. 9d.: pres. net income, £616: patron, Earl of Mornington: pres. incumbent, W. The Romans are supposed to have had a station here, and several relics of that people have been found in the neighbourhood. During the Saxon times, Wantage was a royal seat, and it was here that the great and good king Alfred was born, in the year 849. The town is well paved and lighted with gas, and the inhabitants are chiefly engaged in the manufacture of coarse cloth and twine, and in the flour trade. The church, which is a spacious and handsome cruciform structure, rising from the centre, contains several very interesting monuments. In addition to it there is a chapelry, called Grove Chapel, of the annual value of £64, in the patronage of N. Barnardiston, Esq. The Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, and Baptists, all have chapels here. Two of the schools here are supported by appropriations from the rentals of the town-lands, and from the funds formerly belonging to the free grammar-school, which has been discontinued. The other charities, including the funds of the almshouses in Newbury Street, Mill Street, those erected for 12 poor persons in 1680 by Mr. Robert Styles, together with some minor charities, produce about £642 per annum, a great part of which is appropriated to the relief of the poor. The Wantage poor-law union comprises 34 parishes, with a population of about 16,500 persons, spread over an area of 128 square miles. — The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a vicarage in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £35. 2s. 8½d.: pres. net income, £503: patron, Dean and Chapter of Windsor: pres. incumbent, W. At Emsworth there is the perpetual curacy of St. James, which is in the patronage of the rector of Warblington. Near the church are the romantic remains of an ancient castle, of which Mr. Grose says — "Warblington Castle is situated about half a mile to the eastward of Havant. It appears to have been built with brick, faced on the outside with hewn stone. Its form was nearly square, surmounted with a deep fosse. The stone with which it was faced must have been brought hither by sea; for this country, for a great distance, affords none of the kind. Whether this ruin is a fragment of the ancient mansion of the family of the De Warblingtons, who resided here in the reigns of Edward I., II., and III., or the remains of a seat which afterwards belonged to the earls of Salisbury, is not certain, although most probably the latter, both from the style of the building and part of the materials, which are bricks seemingly much of the same form and proportions as those now made. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, this seat belonged to the family of the Cottons."—The living, a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £19. 9s. 4½d.: pres. net income, £685: patron, Rev. WARDON. See WARDEN-LAW.

WARE, HERTFORD, a parish and market town in the hun^d of Braughin, union of Ware: 24 miles from London (coach road 20), 2 from Hertford, 11 from Stevenage. — East. Co^r Rail. to Ware station: from Derby, through London, &c., 156 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 2 p.m.: post closes 11 a.m. and 10 p.m. — Ware is situated on the river Lea, which is here navigable, and flows with considerable rapidity. It consists of several streets, well paved and lighted; the houses are generally well built, and there is a commodious market-house. The church is a large cruciform edifice, with a nave, chancel, and side aisles, having an embattled tower at the west end. Ware is a place of considerable antiquity, having been founded about the time of Edward the Saxon. It was formerly called Guare, and is believed to have derived its name from the circumstance of a wear having been formed here across the river by the Danes, to protect their fleet, a manœuvre which was counteracted by Alfred, who withdrew the water from the bed of the river and stranded their ships. Ware was at first only an obscure village, and so continued till the time of King John, when Sayer de Quincey, afterwards Earl of Winchester, opened the thoroughfare over the Lea, which had previously been closed by a heavy toll; this, with its other advantages, soon caused it to become a place of considerable trade. In the town is preserved a singular piece of antiquity, called the Great Bed of Ware; it is twelve feet square, and it is said to be capable of accommodating twenty-four persons at the same time. That it is ancient is evident, for Shakspeare alludes to it in his play of the Twelfth Night, though what its origin was cannot now be traced. There were in former times two religious establishments in Ware, one of which was a priory of Benedictines, subordinate to the abbey of Ebrulph, at Utica, in Normandy, to which Hugh de Grentemaisnil granted the church of the town, and two carucates of land. Tanner, in speaking of this establishment, says—Whereupon it became a cell to that abbey; and, in process of time, was so well endowed, that upon the seizure of the alien priories by Edward III., during the wars with France, this was farmed at £200 per annum. After the suppression of these foreign houses, this was given, in the third of Henry V., to the monks at Shene. Henry VI., for some time, annexed it to the abbey of St. Mary, near Leicester; but it was afterwards restored to Shene, and, as parcel of its possessions, granted, by Henry VIII., to Trinity College, in Cambridge. Some remains of the priory may still be discovered in a modern dwelling-house, into which they have been conformed. The other establishment, which was for Grey or Franciscan friars, stood on the north side of the town, but by whom it was founded does not clearly appear. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. The grammar-school is partly supported by a small endowment. In 1778, almshouses for three poor widows were founded by Sir William Roberts. The endowments of other almshouses, and the various charities, produce a further income of about £350 per annum. The trade of the place consists principally in agricultural produce. Ware is governed by four head-boroughs, and petty sessions for the division are held here. In the neighbourhood are the springs that fill the New river formed by Sir Hugh Middleton, which supplies the northern portion of the metropolis with water.—The living is valued at £20. 10s.: contains 4,430 acres: 857 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £11,791: poor rates in 1848, £2,357. 5s.—Market day, Tuesday. Fairs: last Tuesday in April, Tuesday before September 21, for horses and cattle.—Bankers: Branch of London and County Joint Stock Banking Co—draw on Head Office, 21 Lombard Street; Samuel Adams & Co.—draw on Masterman, Peters, & Co.—Saracen's Head Inn.

miles from London (coach road 197), 3 from Torrington, 3 from Bideford. —Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol to Tiverton, thence 34 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 232 miles. —Money orders issued at Torrington: London letters deliv^d. 11 a.m.: post closes 2 p.m. —One of the schools here is endowed with £17 per annum. —The living, a rectory in the archd^y. of Barnstaple, and diocese of Exeter, is valued at £13. 5s.: pres. net income, £180: patron, Earl Fortescue: pres. incumbent, W. Fortescue, 1820: contains 1,670 acres: 109 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 576: ass^d. prop^r. £1,911: poor rates in 1848, £176. 10s.

WAREHAM, DORSET, a borough and market town, containing the three parishes of the Holy Trinity, Lady-St.-Mary and Out-Parish, and St. Martin's, with the liberty of Stoborough, in the hun^d. of Winfrith, union of Wareham and Purbeck, and Blandford or southern division of the county: 126 miles from London (coach road 112), 9 from Poole, 5 from Corfe-Castle. —Sou. West. Rail. through Southampton to Wareham station: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Wareham, 215 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 5 p.m.: post closes 10½ a.m. and 9½ p.m. —This place existed, under the name of Darngeis, as early as the time of the Romans, and is supposed by some to have been built on the site of the station called Moricontum. It was afterwards called Vepham and Thornsacta, and sometimes Warham and Varama. Throughout the long period of its existence, Wareham has had a full share in the vicissitudes recorded in the history of England. Tanner, in speaking of it, says—Here is said to have been a nunnery in the Saxon times, before the year 876, when this town was assaulted and taken by the Danes. After the Conquest, one or more of the churches in this town, with some lands in the neighbourhood, being given by Robert, Earl of Leicester, temp. Henry I., to the abbot and convent of Lira, in Normandy, they sent over and settled here a cell of their own Benedictine monks, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. When the alien priories, during the wars with France, were seized into the king's hands, the priory of Montgrace, in Yorkshire, had the revenues of this for some years; but when these foreign houses were dissolved, King Henry V. gave this, ann. reg. III., to the Carthusians of Shene, and, as parcel of this last-mentioned monastery, the priory of Warham was granted, 1st Mary, to Thomas Reus and George Cotton. Many Roman relics have been found in the neighbourhood. The town, which is situated between the rivers Frome and Piddle, consists of several streets, laid out with singular regularity for so old a place. These streets generally run at right angles towards the several points of the compass. The southern entrance to the town is over a handsome bridge, erected in 1775, which crosses the river Frome. The northern entrance is reached in like manner by a bridge of three arches over the river Piddle. The parishes of Holy Trinity, St. Martin within and without, and Lady St. Mary within and without, were all formerly in the archd^y. of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, but are now transferred to the diocese of Salisbury. The living of the Holy Trinity is a rectory, with those of St. Mary and St.

Martin, rated at £7. 5s. 5d., and, in 1841, in the patronage of John H. Calcraft, Esq., M.P. for the borough. The living of St. Mary's is not in charge; that of St. Martin is rated at £8. 2s. 6d. The churches of the Holy Trinity and St. Martin's have been disused, as also are those of St. Peter and St. Michael, which formerly existed. The church of Saint Mary was an ancient structure, in a mixed style of English architecture, with some traces of the Saxon. It is supposed to have been attached to the ancient priory, and to have been rebuilt about the period of the Conquest. Above the north door was a rudely sculptured representation of the crucifixion. On the south side of the church was a small chapel, the roof of which was richly groined, and which contained several mural monuments to the members of the Calcraft family, and two ancient monuments with recumbent effigies of warriors clad in complete armour. Here were interred the remains of Mr. Hutchins, author of the "History and Antiquities of the County of Dorset," and formerly rector of this parish. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians, have chapels in the town. The free school is endowed with about £30 a year; the other charities produce about £12 a year. Wareham is almost surrounded by an earthen rampart, between which and the town there is a spacious area, almost entirely cultivated as garden-ground, which not only supplies Wareham, but also Poole, with abundance of vegetables. Many of the female inhabitants are employed in the manufacture of straw-plait and stockings; and pipe-clay having been largely discovered in the parish, upwards of 10,000 tons of it are annually exported. Wareham was at one time a port of considerable eminence, but in consequence of the recession of the sea the harbour has been left dry. The town is governed under a charter of Queen Anne, by a mayor, six capital burgesses, and the other requisite officers of a corporation. Courts of quarter-session are held here every month. Formerly two members were returned for the borough to parliament, but the Reform Act limited the election to one. The Purbeck and Wareham poor-law union comprises 27 parishes, with a population of about 15,000 persons, spread over an area of 147 square miles. Contains 4,880 acres: 494 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 3,000: ass^d. prop^r £3,534. Market day, Saturday. Fairs: April 17, July 5, and September 11. Bankers: R. & H. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, York, and Newcastle, to Warkworth station: from Derby, through York, &c., 207 miles. — Money orders issued at Alnwick: London letters deliv^d 2 p.m.: post closes 10 a.m. — The church is a handsome building, with an elegant spire; at the western extremity there is a fine monument to Sir Hugh de Morwick, to whose liberality the inhabitants are indebted for the common. Near the churchyard are the remains of an old Benedictine cell, attached to the abbey at Durham. The Wesleyan Methodists have chapel here. The village stands near the sea, and is almost entirely surrounded by the river Coquet. It consists principally of one long street, running from the bridge to the castle, and contains several very respectable dwellings. Of late years, breakwater piers have been erected at the mouth of the Coquet. Warkworth is said to be a borough by prescription, and courts leet and baron are held here annually in October, by the Duke of Northumberland. But the principal interest of this place is derived from its ancient castle, now a picturesque ruin. Mr. Stephen Oliver, in speaking of it, says, in his Rambles through Northumberland, "The Castle of Warkworth stands on the south side of the river Coquet, and about a mile from its mouth, on a piece of elevated ground, steep on the west, but on the north and east rising from the river-side with a more gentle acclivity. On the south side, where the castle-yard is on a level with the adjacent country, the entrance has been defended by a deep ditch, which was crossed by a drawbridge. The barbican, or gateway tower, on the exterior south wall, was in the olden times defended by a portcullis, and had been of much greater magnitude than it is at present, the upper part now being much dilapidated. It formerly contained a prison, and the porter's lodgings, with apartments for the constable of the castle over them. Passing through the arch-way of this tower, in the lower part of which the person who has charge of the castle resides, the visitor finds himself within the castle-yard, an enclosure about 85 yards long from north to south, by 66 broad, and containing rather more than a square acre. To the west of the gateway are the remains of a tower, in which there were formerly a kitchen, buttery, and other offices. This was called the lion tower, from the figure of a lion which still remains over the arch forming the entrance. To the north stands the keep, which is of a square figure, with the angles truncated, having a projecting tower of a semi-octangular form on each of its sides, and surmounted by a lofty exploratory turret. A flight of steps leads to the principal entrance, which is in the southern tower. The lower apartments, of which there are eight, have arched stone roofs, and are dimly lighted by loop-holes. In the floor of one of these apartments is an opening to a gloomy vault, fifteen feet square, supposed to have been used as a place of solitary confinement for prisoners; and as there are no stairs by which a person can descend to this black-hole, the wretched captives who were confined there must either have been lowered down by means of ropes, or have descended by the use of a ladder. From those apartments one large and two smaller staircases lead to the next story, the former terminating in a spacious landing-place, round which stone seats are fixed, and which has been a sort of anti-room to the great hall. The great hall is thirty-nine feet long and twenty-four feet wide, and had been about twenty feet high, extending to the roof, which no longer remains. On this floor are various other apartments, all of which, as they are much lower than the great hall, have had others of the same size above them. Notwithstanding the injuries which Warkworth Castle has sustained from the slowly-corroding touch of time, and the more abrupt dilapidations of man, it still presents a more perfect representation of the stronghold of a feudal baron of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries, than any other castle on the borders either of England or Scotland. The greater part of the outer walls, enclosing the castle-yard, are yet standing; and the walls of the keep and its adjoining towers are, for the most part, strong and in comparatively good repair." And Hutchinson, in his "View of Northumberland," says of the splendid prospect commanded from its summit—"From hence, the view is so extensive and various, that description can convey but a very imperfect idea of its members or beauties. To the east and north-east there is a sea prospect, with which you take in all the shore we had traversed, with Dunstanbrough and Bambrough Castles at the most distant point of land. The Farn islands lie scattered like patches on the face of the waters. The port of Almouth is a nearer object; and at a little distance, the mouth of the river Coquet and Coquet island, with its ruined monastery, are seen. To the north you view a rich cultivated country to Alnwick; westward, the banks of Coquet river, graced with little woodlands, which here and there impend on its winding channel. To the south, you view an extensive plain, inclining towards the sea, crowded with villages and interspersed with woods; the shore indented by many little ports and creeks; the higher grounds scattered over with many hamlets, churches, and other buildings, mingling with a variety highly pleasing; whilst, in the extreme distance, the different tints of the landscape, arising from various objects, require colours to convey their picture to the mind." The hermitage of Warkworth, which consists of three small apartments hewn out of the rock, is a beautifully secluded retreat, situated on the wood banks of the river, about a mile above the castle, from which it is reached by a boat. The Duke of Northumberland takes the title of baron from Warkworth. — The living (St. Lawrence), a vicarage in the archd^y of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, is valued at £18. 5s. 7¹/₂d.: pres. net income, £328: patron, Bishop of Carlisle: pres. incumbent, Henry Percy, 1840: contains 15,110 acres: 432 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,512: do. in 1851, 4,012: ass^d. prop^y £25,648: poor rates in 1848, £680. It was in after times accounted sometimes a distinct religious house, at other times as parcel of the priory of Tufes in Norfolk, belonging to the same foreign monastery. After the dissolution of these alien priories, it was granted, 7th Henry VI., to the Carthusians at Wytham in Somersetshire, and as parcel of their possessions was granted, 35th Henry VIII., to William and Francis Sheldon. There are the vestiges of an extensive Roman encampment in the neighbourhood.* — The living, a rectory in the diocese of Worcester, is valued at £16. 13s. 11½d.: pres. net income, £450: patron, Trustees of Hulme's Exhibition: pres. incumbent, William Harrison, 1831: contains 1,720 acres: 103 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 496: ass^d. prop^r. £3,074: poor rates in 1848, £241. 6s. Camden conceives it to have been the Verlucio of the Romans; and certainly, at the time even of the Norman Conquest, it was regarded as very ancient, and possessed many privileges. In the neighbourhood there are two strange-looking conical hills, one of which was ascertained by Sir R. C. Hoare to be a barrow or burying-place, while the other seems to have been formed for the erection of a beacon or signal-post. Not far from these there are the traces of several encampments, partly British, partly Roman. The town of Warminster consists principally of one long street. The town-hall, which is an elegant structure, has been built within these few years, and contains all the accommodations required for the public business and social enjoyments of the district. The church, which is a handsome structure, stands to the north of the town on the Bath road. Christ Church is a perpetual curacy, with a stipend of £150, under the patronage of the vicar: pres. incumbent, Rev. J. H. A. Walsh, inducted in 1831. Besides these, there is a chapel of ease standing in the market-place, supposed to have been founded in the time of Edward I.; it is partly supported by endowment. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Unitarians, all have chapels here. The free grammar-school was founded in 1707 by Thomas Lord Weymouth, who endowed it with £30 a year. The other charities produce about £160 a year.

The town is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who hold a petty-sessions once a month, and a court-leet is held by the lord of the manor, at which a high constable, deputy-constables, and tithingmen, are annually chosen. The quarter-sessions for the county are also held at Warminster, which is a polling-place for the southern division of Wiltshire. The Warminster poor-law union comprises 21 parishes, with a population of about 17,500 persons, spread over an area of 88 square miles. — The living (St. Denis), a vicarage in the diocese of Salisbury, is valued at £18. 0s. 2½d.: pres. net income, £324: patron, Bishop of Salisbury: pres. incumbent, Arthur Fane, 1841: contains 5,430 acres: 1,236 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 6,211: do. in 1851, 6,400: ass^d. prop^r. £17,381: poor rates in 1848, £2,934. 15s. Money orders issued at Bishop's Waltham: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5¹2 p.m. The charities produce about £2 per annum. Mr. Grose, in speaking of a decayed mansion here, called King John's House, says—"This venerable ruin, which has so long remained unnoticed by the curious, stands in the garden of the Earl of Clanricarde at Warnford. It is known by the title of King John's House, an appellation common to many ancient structures in which that king had no concern. In a map of Hampshire, engraved by Norden about 1610, this building is marked as a ruined place, and in some writings of a more ancient date, belonging to the Clanricarde family, it is conveyed, with the manor and present mansion, by the denomination of the Old House. What it originally was can only be conjectured. Two ancient inscriptions on the parish church seem to afford some grounds to suppose it the ancient church built by Wilfrid, bishop of York, between the years 679, when he took refuge among the South Saxons, and 685, when he returned to his see." The dimensions of the building appear to have been about 80 feet by 54. The living, a rectory in the diocese of Winchester, is valued at £21. 9s. 4¹2d.: pres. net income, £502: patron, Rev. J. Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 5 p.m.: post closes 8 p.m. and 5½ a.m. This is a place of great antiquity, and is supposed by some authorities to have been a British town, even before the invasion of the Romans, and that it was in the year 79 converted into a British station by Agricola. In the time of the Saxons, it took its name of Werguntun from the Saxon word waring, signifying a fortification, and in the time of Edward the Confessor, it formed a part of the royal domains. In Domesday Book, it is mentioned as Wallingtun, and in the time of Edward I. it obtained a charter for a fair and market, through William le Boteler, who was lord of the town. During the great civil war, Warrington was the scene of many important events. At first it was held for the king; but after a siege of five days, Colonel Norris, its commander, was obliged to capitulate with 1,600 of his men. Again it was taken, and again retaken by the parliamentarians within six months. In 1648, it was the scene of a bloody and obstinately fought contest, between General Lambert, and the retreating Scotch army under the Duke of Hamilton, in which battle more than 1,000 men were slain. It terminated in favour of General Lambert, who again met the royalists here in 1651, under Charles II., and whom he overthrew with a very bloody defeat. Warrington, in a military point of view, has always been considered the key of Lancashire, in consequence of the easy access obtained to different parts of the county, by the bridge over the Mersey. The town consists of several principal streets, which are open, and contain many handsome modern dwellings. From these, others of meaner appearance diverge on every side, being long and narrow, and exhibiting all the inconveniences of an olden built town. Besides the places of worship, there are several buildings of considerable pretensions. The town-hall, market-hall, cloth-hall, and assembly-rooms, are all places well worthy of notice. There are several admirable specimens of the domestic architecture of the middle age, and one especially, a cottage which stands near the market-place, is said to be the most perfect instance of the style of building under the Tudors in all the northern counties. Warrington is indeed one of the oldest, if not the very oldest, town in Lancashire. The old living of the parish is a rectory in the arch^d. and diocese of Chester; rated at £40; no return. The tithes were commuted in 1840. Patron in 1841, Lord Lilford. The ancient church is a structure built in the time of the Saxons, and dedicated to St. Elfin; but of this building there are few remains, the site being occupied by the present edifice, which is dedicated to St. Helen, and is in a mixed style of architecture. It contains two ancient sepulchral chapels, in one of which are the tomb and effigies of Sir Thomas Boteler and his lady, surrounded with some curious specimens of carving; and in the other are some monuments to the Patten family, but formerly to the Masseys. Here is an excellent piece of sculpture erected to the memory of Thomas Wilson Patten, Esq., who died at Naples in 1819. A crypt, supposed to have been of Saxon origin, has been recently discovered under the eastern part of the church, and the inhabitants of the town have had it cleared out, and restored, as nearly as possible, to its ancient state. Besides the rectory, there are five perpetual curacies in the parish. Trinity, with a gross income of £130, is in the patronage of Thomas Leigh, Esq. St. Paul's, with a gross income of £125, is in the patronage of the rector. See also BIRCH, HOLLINGFARE, and BURTON-WOOD. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1776; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1779; a Huntingdonian, in 1807; and places of worship for Baptists, the Society of Friends, Independent Methodists, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The free school was erected, and first endowed, by one of the Boteler family in 1526. The master is appointed by Lord Lilford, and, under a decree obtained in 1820 from the Court of Chancery, receives a salary of £300 per annum, with a free house and garden. By the same authority, the salary of the usher is fixed at no less than £60, nor more than £100 annually; that of the writing-master is from £40 to £60. The master is entitled to an addition on the number of boys exceeding thirty. The school is open to all boys above the age of seven, and natives of Lancashire or Cheshire. The income of this charity, in 1828, amounted to about £712 per annum. Here has also existed since 1677 a Blue-coat school, at which 150 boys and 40 girls receive instruction, of which number 14 of the former and 10 of the latter are clothed. It is partly supported by subscription, but principally by rent of land bequeathed or purchased by benefactions at different periods. Besides these funds, it has a reversionary in two estates, one at Sankey, worth about £6,000, and left in 1797 by John Watkins, Esq., and the other in the county of Bedford, given in 1685 by Arthur Borron. The income of this charity in 1828 amounted to upwards of £450 per annum. Several minor charities produce together about £20 per annum. Warrington has long been celebrated for its literary eminence. From it was issued the first newspaper ever printed in Lancashire, and from it the first stage-coach was started. In 1757, an academy was constituted here under the auspices of Dr. Aiken, Dr. Taylor, Dr. Priestley, Dr. Enfield, and the Rev. Gilbert Wakefield. The institution was, however, afterwards transferred to York, and ultimately to Manchester. Mrs. Barbauld celebrated its opening in one of her best poems, which Dr. Enfield preserved in his "Speaker," a collection originally made for the students in Warrington academy. Howard's great work on prisons was printed at Warrington, under the superintendence of Dr. Aiken, and from the same press were issued most of Mrs. Barbauld's poems, the earlier writings of the late Mr. Roscoe, and the works of Ferrier, Gibson, and many others. Warrington stands admirably situated for trade, for it has water communication with Liverpool through the Mersey, by which vessels of from 80 to 100 tons burthen can reach the town; through the Manchester and Irwell navigation, and the Sankey Canals, with the whole of that district; and it is, besides, and more than all these, the centre of a perfect network of railways, by means of which it is joined nearly or more remotely with every commercial entrepot in the kingdom. It has long been celebrated as a manufacturing place; in the first instance, for its coarse woollens and checks, and afterwards for its sailcloths, of which immense quantities were made, and now for its fustians, which are the best in the world. There are also several extensive soap manufactories and tanneries in the place, and large quantities of the celebrated Warrington ale are brewed here, not only for home consumption, but for export. The town is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates, the constables, and other officers, being chosen annually at the court-leet of the lord of the manor. By the Reform Act, the borough returns one member to parliament. The Warrington poor-law union comprises 15 parishes, with a population of about 28,000 persons, spread over an area of 38 square miles. Contains 12,260 acres: 3,589 houses: ass^d prop^r £45,694. Market days, Wednesday and Thursday. Fairs: every alternate Wednesday, for cattle; July 18, Nov. 30. Bankers: Branch of Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Co.—draw on Smith, Payne, and Co.; Parr, Lyon, and Greenhall—draw on Curries and Co.—Inns: Nag's Head and Lion; Patten Arms Hotel.

WARWICK, CUMBERLAND, a parish in the union of Carlisle, partly in the ward of Cumberland, and partly in that of Eskdale, on the river Eden, over which there is a bridge of four arches: the parish includes the townships of Aglionby, Little Corby, and Warwick: 308 miles from London (coach road 301), 5 miles from Carlisle, 6 from Brampton. Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe and Lancaster to Carlisle, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 203 miles. Money orders issued at Carlisle: London letters deliv^d 11½ a.m.: post closes 1 p.m. There are the remains of some Roman earthworks here. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to Wetherall: contains 2,070 acres: 129 houses: ass^d prop^y £2,894: poor rates in 1848, £124. 6s.

WARWICK, WARWICKSHIRE, a borough and market town, the capital of the above county, locally situated in the hun^d of Kington, southern division of the county, on the banks of the Avon, and in the line of the Birmingham and Warwick, and Warwick and Napton Canal: 107 miles from London (coach road 90), 8 from Stratford-on-Avon, 10 from Coventry. Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford and Banbury to Warwick station: from Derby, through Rugby to Warwick, 65 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m. and 2½ p.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. and 8.5 p.m. According to the best antiquaries, Warwick was a place of considerable importance even in the time of the Britons; and Rous, the historian of the county, states, that having frequently suffered from the incursions of the Picts, it was rebuilt by the celebrated and heroic chief, Caractacus, upon whose defeat and capture, in the year A.D. 50, fortresses were erected by the Roman emperor Claudius, upon the banks of the Avon and the Severn; one of these is supposed to have been the foundation of the present town of Warwick. Under the Saxon heptarchy, Warwick was included in the kingdom of Mercia, and came into the possession of Warremund, its sovereign, who called the town after his own name, Warre-Wyke, or the town of Warre, and hence its present appellation of Warwick. During several of the earlier Danish invasions, Warwick suffered much, but was rebuilt and reinstated by Ethelfleda, the celebrated daughter of King Alfred, who also, in the year 915, erected the most ancient part of the castle. Shortly after the Norman Conquest, the importance of Warwick as a military station was perceived, and it was speedily surrounded with walls, parts of which still remain, and are known by the name of Wall-dykes. It was here that the clever, celebrated, but unprincipled royal favourite, Piers Gaveston, was imprisoned by Guy, Earl of Warwick, who, with the Earls of Lancaster, Hereford, and Arundel, condemned him to death, and he was beheaded on Blacklow Hill. During the civil war, Warwick was held for the parliament by Greville, Lord Brooke, and, during his absence, endured a siege of fourteen days' duration. In 1694, the town suffered dreadfully from fire, so much so, that a national contribution of £110,000 was raised for the relief of the inhabitants, of which £1,000 was given by the sovereign, Queen Anne. Warwick is delightfully situated in the midst of a beautiful, luxurious, and very varied country, on the acclivity and summit of a rocky eminence, which rises abruptly from the northern bank of the river Avon, over which there is a handsome bridge of one arch, constructed a few years ago at the expense of the Earl of Warwick. The new part of the town, built after the fire, is neat and well arranged, showing a pleasing but somewhat unromantic contrast with those portions constructed in the mediæval times. The principal street, which runs at a short distance parallel with the river, is of considerable length, and contains many handsome houses, being intersected at right angles by one wide street and several smaller ones. There is a gateway at each end, the one to the west being surmounted by an ancient chapel, a beautiful little structure built in the time of Henry VI., formerly used as a place of worship, but now adapted to educational purposes. Of late years Warwick has undergone very considerable improvements, and now the streets are admirably paved and brilliantly lighted with gas, while the inhabitants are abundantly supplied with water, conducted from springs in the neighbourhood, through pipes into the town. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—In the north-west part of this town was an abbey in the Saxon times, which was destroyed, A.D. 1016, by Canutus the Dane. Here was also anciently a house of nuns, where is now St. Nicholas' churchyard, which is said to have been burned to the ground by the Danes, A.D. 1016. On the north side of this town, where once stood a parochial church of St. Helen, Henry de Newburgh, Earl of Warwick, began, and his son, Earl Roger, finished, temp. Henry I., an hospital or priory of canons regular, in honour of the Holy Sepulchre, and of that order. About the time of the general dissolution, herein were a prior and two or three poor religious, who were endowed with £41. 10s. 2d. per annum, Dugd.; £49. 13s. 6d., Speed. The site of this monastery was granted, 38th Hen. VIII., to Thomas Hawkyne, alias Fysher. Roger, Earl of Warwick, is said to have founded here the house of templars beyond the bridge, temp. R. Hen. I., or R. Steph., which was certified, 9th Edward II., to be of the yearly value of £14. 6s. 8d.; and after the dissolution of that order became part of the preceptory of Balshall in this county, belonging to the knights-hospitallers. If what John Rous reports be true, concerning St. Dubricius fixing an episcopal seat here, in the church of All Saints, within the precincts of the castle, about the latter end of the sixth century, before he went to Llandaff, this was the most ancient foundation in this county. It is pretty certain that before the Conquest there were great privileges belonging to this church of All Saints, and therein were secular priests or canons, who were, after the year 1125, united to the college of St. Mary in this town, the castle rendering their old church and habitation very inconvenient. The church of Our Lady, in this town, seemed to be more than parochial, temp. Will. Conq., because it was endowed with a hide of land in Milton at the time of making the Domesday-book. Henry de Newburgh, the first earl of Warwick of the Norman line, gave several tithes and lands to it for prebends, with design to make it collegiate, and to unite the church of All Saints in Castle to it; but dying before he could complete it, his son, Earl Roger, after the year 1123, finished it, and established therein

a dean and secular canons. It was increased in revenues and buildings by the munificence of several earls of Warwick, among which the beautiful chapel of Our Lady, on the south side of the choir, founded according to the will of Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, highly deserves notice. About the time of the dissolution, here were a dean, five prebendaries or canons, ten priests vicars, and six choristers, who had possessions to the value of £247. 13s. ob. per annum, Dugd. and Speed; £334. 2s. 3d. ob., according to a MS. in the hands of Sir Simon Archer. The site of this college was granted, 31th Hen. VIII., to the burgesses of Warwick. "In the north suburb is a chapel of St. Michael, where sometime was a college having a master and confratres." This was the hospital of St. Michael at the lower end of Saltford Street, founded by Roger, Earl of Warwick, in the latter end of the reign of King Hen. I., or beginning of that of King Stephen, for a master or warden, and several leprous brethren, whose revenues were valued, 26th Henry VIII., at £12. 5s. 2d. per annum in the whole, and clearly at £10. 1s. 10d. But by another survey, made 37th Hen. VIII., they were certified to be worth £10. 19s. 10d. over and above all reprises. This hospital is still kept up for eight poor women. Here were also a college dedicated to St. James, an hospital dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and another dedicated to St. Thomas, and houses of Black and White friars. The borough contains two parishes, St. Mary and St. Nicholas, both in the archd. and diocese of Worcester. That of St. Mary's is a vicarage; rated at £20, returned at £135; gross income £300. Patrons, in 1835, the Corporation of Warwick. The church, formerly collegiate, is a magnificent pile, in a mixed style of architecture. It was erected in the 14th century, on the site of a more ancient structure dedicated to "Our Lady." The tower and the greater part of the building were destroyed in the conflagration of 1694, and rebuilt in 1704. The chancel, which is part of the original edifice, is in the later style of English architecture, and displays much beauty in its details; the nave is spacious and of lofty dimensions, separated from the aisles by ranges of clustered columns. The tower, which rises to the height of 130 feet, is built in successive stages, and the lower part is supported by four pointed arches, beneath which is a spacious passage. At the four angles are lofty and enriched pinnacles, between which are others not so high, and the whole being seen from a great distance presents a beautiful appearance. The exterior is in general elaborately finished, but the eastern part, in particular, is of great beauty, being furnished with richly wrought buttresses; and the front on this side is part of the original edifice, uniting, in a striking degree, grandeur of design, with simplicity and elegance of detail. The windows of the aisles and transepts are, unfortunately, without any claim to beauty. Among those parts of the original edifice which escaped the conflagration, is the beautiful chapel, commonly called the Beauchamp Chapel, from its having been erected by Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick. The entrance to it is in the south transept of the church, and the building presents an elegant specimen of the later style. The roof is elaborately groined; and the altar-piece consists of a basso-relievo in marble, representing the Salutation, from the chisel of Collins. This chapel contains a splendid monument to the memory of the Earl of Warwick, and another to that of Robert Dudley, Earl of Leicester. On the north side are a chantry and confessional. The living of St. Nicholas is a vicarage; rated at £13. 6s. 8d., returned at £125; gross income, £218. Tithes, moduses, &c., commuted in 1772. Patrons, in 1835, the corporation of Warwick. The church was rebuilt in 1780: it is a neat edifice, in the later style of English architecture. The Independents, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, Society of Friends, and Unitarians, have places of worship here: and, in 1833, there were 18 daily, 2 boarding, and 10 Sunday schools, besides an infant school, capable of accommodating 150 children. The free grammar-school, situated on the Butts, was founded by Henry VIII., and endowed with part of the revenues arising from the lands of the confiscated monasteries. Connected with this school are two exhibitions of £70 per annum each, which were founded by Mr. Fulke Weale, and entitle the holders to go to any of the colleges in Oxford. The school has also sometimes, in default or failure of candidates from Combrooke, the benefit of two exhibitions for Trinity College, Cambridge, founded by Lady Verney. The school-rooms are in an ancient building, founded by Richard, Earl of Warwick, for the use of the dean and canons of the church of St. Mary, and consisting of two cloisters, forming, with other parts of the building, a quadrangle. Two other schools, held in the ancient chapel of St. Peter, are also endowed with estates and charity funds by the Hon. Mrs. Greville, Earl Brookes, Thomas Okens, and Fulke Weale. Leicester hospital was founded by Robert, Earl of Leicester, who appropriated for that purpose a building formerly used by the ancient guilds of the Holy Trinity and St. George, granted to him at the general dissolution. He endowed it for the use of a master and twelve aged brethren, preferring such as had been wounded or disabled in the service of their country. The funds of this institution having increased so as to afford £130 per annum to each of the brethren, an act of parliament was procured, in 1813, augmenting the master's salary to £400, it having been limited by the will of the original donor to £50 per annum, and at the same time reducing the incomes of the brethren to £80, until, by the accumulation of unappropriated income, additional brethren should be admitted, when the funds were to be equally divided amongst them. In 1837 the annual income was £2,015. 16s.; and the accumulations had exceeded the sum which, by the act of 1813, was directed to be applied, as soon as it was received, to the converting of the hall into apartments for an additional number of brethren; but nothing had then been done in this respect. The hospital building is in the form of a quadrangle, one side of which contains the great hall, another the master's house, and the two others are occupied by the rest of the brethren, who have separate apartments. The costume of the almsmen is a blue gown, with the crest of the founder, the bear and ragged staff, on the left shoulder. The appointment of the master and brethren is vested in Sir John Shelley Sidney. The patronage of

Hampton-in-Arden belongs to the master and brethren. Divine service is performed by the master daily in the chapel of St. James, annexed to, and forming part of the hospital, except when there is service in the parish church of St. Mary's. There are, in different parts of the town, almshouses, chiefly for poor women, the inmates of which receive small sums weekly, with donations of coals, gowns, &c. A dispensary has also been established. Sir Thomas White's charity, in aid of deserving young tradesmen of Warwick, to be placed out in loans not exceeding £100 each for 9 years, free of interest, amounted, in 1827, to £11,510. 19s. 4d. Of this sum, £8,800 was, in 1826, outstanding in loans, and £3,060. 19s. in the hands of the receiver; the sum beyond £1,500 bearing interest at $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. In 1829, the actual amount of this fund was £12,800. 9s. $3\frac{1}{2}$ d. The principal of the trust estates, and which is in part applicable to municipal purposes, is that called King Henry Eighth's estate, the annual income of which, in 1833, amounted to £2,762. 6s. 9d. From Oken's charity, yielding about £670 per annum, £300 are expended in weekly disbursements to the poor. In 1732, Mrs. Ann Johnson bequeathed property producing £258. 10s. per annum, for the purpose of apprenticing poor children, &c. Other minor charities produced about £750 per annum. On 19th October, 1836, 21 trustees were appointed to manage the charities previously under the control of the corporation. On the road to Kenilworth, there is a rock called Guy's Cliff, in which Richard, Earl of Warwick, is supposed to have taken refuge during the latter years of his life, under the guise of a monastic hermit; and near the cave which he principally occupied, there is a range of cells adjacent to two stone basins, into which the translucent waters of several crystal springs constantly flow; they are called "Guy's Well." On the rock there is a colossal statue of the earl in armour, and on the height a modern mansion has been built by the late B. Greathead, Esq. Beside the ecclesiastical edifices spoken of above, there are several structures well worthy of notice. The court-house, situated on the south side of the High Street, erected shortly after the fire, is an ornament to the town; it contains a spacious apartment, which is used on festal occasions by the corporation, as well as for the winter balls and other social enjoyments of the elite of the town and neighbourhood. The county hall is an elegant structure in the Corinthian style; it was built in 1758. The county jail, a substantial structure, also stands here. The market-house is also an elegant stone structure, with a piazza, containing, on the upper story, the museum of the Warwickshire Natural History and Archæological Society, established in 1836. Near to this is the public library, a neat edifice, excellently stored with all the popular works of the day, and admirably furnished with a valuable set of books of reference. In the neighbourhood of the town, there are numerous seats and gentlemen's villas. The chief glory of Warwick consists in its noble castle, a lofty and extensive pile, standing on a vast area of ground, and for feudal grandeur, and imposing effect, surpassed by no other baronial residence in the kingdom. Everything within and about it is in perfect keeping. Lofty and ancient forest trees, clothed with the deep rich verdure of summer, or flinging their wide branches in the autumnal winds, wave upon the edge of the precipice that overhangs the river, which rushes onwards in a thousand cascades between its picturesque banks, and throwing up the sparklings of its waters to the differing lights of the varying sky above, shaded in their seasons by the dull grey tone of wintry weather, or coloured by the reflex of the deep green foliage by which they are overshadowed. The rock, about 100 feet high, is situated on the south side of the town, and has a charming prospect, which runs along the margin of the cliff. The front of this magnificent structure, towards the river, is broken and irregular, producing, as it rises from the summit of the rock on which it stands, a singularly striking appearance. As stated above, the more ancient parts of the building were the work of Ethelfleda; but William the Conqueror, who was well competent to judge of its capacity as a military post, greatly enlarged it, and strengthened its fortifications, confiding it to the custody of Henry de Newburgh, whom he created Earl of Warwick. It suffered much during the wars of the barons; but was soon rebuilt and restored to its former magnificence. James I. granted it to Sir Fulke Greville, afterwards Lord Brooke, and in the time of Charles II., Robert, Earl Brooke, embellished the whole structure, and furnished the state apartments. The edifice consists of a series of walls and towers, with buildings connecting and surrounding an irregular court; the whole are occupied, and exceeds three acres. The grand suite of apartments extend in a right line upwards of 333 feet. They are furnished in the most sumptuous style, and embellished by almost innumerable specimens of the fine arts. The gardens and pleasure grounds are laid out with consummate taste, and the park attached to the castle is very extensive, pleasingly varied by water, and ornamented by the finest timber. So much has been said of this castle, that it is only necessary to state that its noble owner, the Earl Brooke, K.T., Baron Brooke of Beauchamp, in the same county, lord-lieutenant and custos rotulorum of the county of Warwick, derives his descent from the Sir Fulke Greville, spoken of above, who was created Baron Brooke of Beauchamp Court. The descendant of that nobleman, Francis, Lord Brooke, was elevated to the earldom of Warwick in 1719, and of him the present peer is the direct descendant.—Contains 5,360 acres: 1,715 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £29,455.—Market days: Tuesday and Saturday.—Fairs: second Monday in January, February, March, and April; May 12; second Monday in June and July, for wool; second Monday in August, September, and October 12, for cattle; last Monday in October, second Monday in November, and Monday before December 21.—Bankers: Branch of Leamington-Priors and Warwickshire Banking Co.—draw on Williams, Deacon, & Co.; Warwick and Leamington Banking Co.—draw on Hanbury, Taylor, and Co.; Greenway and Greaves—draw on Glyn, Halifax, and Co.—Castle Inn, and George and Globe Hotels.

18 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 195 miles. — Money orders issued at Taunton: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. — Watchet is situated in a fine valley on the shore of a creek of the Bristol Channel. It contains several streets, well paved, and formerly had a considerable trade, and a herring-fishery; but few vessels now frequent the port, and these are chiefly engaged in the transport coastwise of coal, limestone, gypsum, and kelp. An admirable pier was constructed here in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, which is kept in repair by the levying of tonnage duties. The coast in the neighbourhood is formed of excellent limestone, which, when burnt, is of peculiar value. The cement made with it is of adamantine hardness, and it was that formed from the Watchet limestone with which Eddystone lighthouse was constructed. Alabaster is also abundantly found here, and that, with the seaweed, which is profuse in its luxuriance, is burnt largely for the Bristol glass-houses. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship in the village. — Contains 140 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 600. — Market day, Saturday. Fairs: Nov. 17, Aug. 23.

Tithes commuted in 1789.

WATERBEACH, CAMBRIDGE, a parish in the hun^d of North Stow, union of Chesterton, on the river Cam: 63 miles from London (coach road 57), 6 from Cambridge, 10 from Newmarket. — Nor. and East. Co^a Rail. to Waterbeach station, thence 6 miles: from Derby, through Syston and Peterborough to Waterbeach, 132 miles. — Money orders issued at Cambridge: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 4 p.m. — The free school here has a small endowment. There was formerly a cell here to the monastery of Ely, which was removed about the year 1160 to Denny. It afterwards fell into the possession of the knights-templars. Tanner, speaking of this place, says—The Lady Dyonisia de Monte Canisio, or Mount Chensy, A.D. 1293, built here, to the honour of the piety of the Blessed Virgin Mary and St. Clare, an abbey for nuns minoresses, who were by Mary, countess of Pembroke, about A.D. 1348, removed to a religious house of the same order, then lately founded by her at Denny. At the dissolution, the revenues of this institution amounted to £172 per annum. Alms-houses for four poor women were endowed here about 1624. The present income amounts to £27 per annum; the other charities produce about £116 per annum. — The living (St. John), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^r. and diocese of Ely, is valued at £5. 15s. 7½d.: pres. net income, £424: patron, Bishop of Ely: pres. incumbent, Henry Fardell, 1822: contains 5,556 acres: 229 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,270: do. in 1851, 1,470: ass^d. prop^r. £5,623: poor rates in 1848, £484. 16s. —Contains 41 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 366: ass^d. prop^r. £1,537: poor rates in 1848, £101. 5s.

WATERINGBURY, KENT, a parish, formerly a market town, in the hun^d. of Twyford, union of Malling: it contains the hamlets of Lilly and Pizein-well: 49 miles from London (coach road 30), 8 from Tunbridge, 5 from Maidstone. —Sou. East. Rail. to Tunbridge, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 181 miles. —Money orders issued at Maidstone: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. —The village is delightfully situated, and the church, which is a pleasing Gothic structure with a spire, adds much to the agreeable appearance of the place. On every side, the scenery, enlivened by many beautiful aspects of the river Medway, is singularly rich and diversified, especially between the village and Maidstone, so much so, that it has not inappropriately been termed the "garden of Kent." Mr. Hasted, in speaking of this place, says—"A singular and very ancient custom was here kept up of electing a deputy to the dumb borsholder of Chart, as it was called, claiming liberty over fifteen houses in the precinct of Pizein-well; every householder of which hamlet was formerly obliged to pay the keeper of this borsholder one penny yearly. This dumb borsholder was always first called at the court-leet holden for the hundred of Twyford; when its keeper, who was yearly appointed by that court, held it up to his call, with a neckcloth or handkerchief put through the iron ring fixed at the top, and answered for it. This borsholder of Chart, and the court-leet, has been discontinued about a century; and the borsholder put in by the quarter-sessions for Wateringbury, claims over the whole parish. The dumb borsholder was made of wood, about three feet and half an inch long, with an iron ring at the top, and four more by the sides, near the bottom, where it had a square iron spike fixed, four inches and a half long, to fix it in the ground, or on occasion to break open doors, &c., which was used to be done, without a warrant of any justice, on suspicion of goods having been unlawfully come by, and concealed in any of these fifteen houses. It is not easy, at this distance of time, to ascertain the origin of this dumb officer. Perhaps it might have been made use of as a badge or ensign, by the officer of the market here. The last person who acted as deputy to it was one Thomas Champard, a blacksmith, whose heirs had it afterwards in their possession. The market, granted in the reign of King Edward II., is reported by tradition to have continued to be held here in a place called Chart Garden, now a wood near Pizein-well, in the south-west part of this parish, in which wood there are to be seen foundations of walls and houses, and in it and the neighbouring lands are several draw-wells." Hops are cultivated to a large extent in the parish. —The living (St. John the Baptist), a disch^d. vicarage in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £5: pres. net income, £600: patron, Dean and Chapter of Rochester: pres. incumbent, H. Stevens, 1840: contains 1,270 acres: 210 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,273: do. in 1851, 1,473: ass^d. prop^r. £3,554: poor rates in 1848, £348. 15s.

WATER-MILLOCK, CUMBERLAND, a chapelry in the parish of Greystock—(which see for access,

&c.)—ward of Leath, union of Penrith, on the north-west bank of the celebrated lake of Ulleswater: 287 miles from London, 7 from Penrith, 6 from Greystock. —Money orders issued at Penrith: London letters deliv^d. 9¼ a.m.: post closes 1 p.m. —One of the schools here is endowed with the interest of £525 government stock. The chapelry is situated in a singularly picturesque district, beautifully varied, the houses being scattered, and mostly shaded by lofty and luxuriant forest trees, whilst the residences of the gentry, with their pleasing grounds, add much to the beauty of the scene. In Gow-Barrow Park there is a deep glen, through which the impetuous torrent pours that forms the cataract called Airy-Force, the water being dashed from rock to rock, and producing a most beautiful effect. —The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to Greystock: contains 80 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £2,825: poor rates in 1848, £153. 9s.

WATER-OVERTON (or ORTON), WARWICK, a chapelry in the parish and union of Aston—(which see for access, &c.)—Birmingham division of the hun^d. of Hemlingford: 106 miles from London, 2 from Colehill, 8 from Birmingham. —Money orders issued at Colehill: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. —The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to Aston.

W. Henley, Esq.: pres. incumbent, E. Armitage, 1848: contains 2,620 acres: 41 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 270: ass^d. prop^r. £5,034: poor rates in 1848, £201. 15s. —The Hall, a fine mansion, formerly the residence of the Curzon family, is now the property and seat of Joseph Henry Warner, Esq., who is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Oxfordshire, and has long represented the county in parliament.

WATERSTOCK, OXFORD, a parish in the hun^d. and union of Thame: 72 miles from London (coach road 57), 5 from Thame, 9 from Oxford. —(For access and postal arrangements, see above.) —The church contains a fine monument to Sir John Croke, Bart. The charities produce about £8 a year. —The living (St. Leonard), a rectory in the archd^y. and diocese of Oxford, is valued at £10. 16s. ½d.: pres. net income, £58: patron, W. H. Ashurst: pres. incumbent, G. W. Jordan, 1827: contains 660 acres: 26 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 127: ass^d. prop^r. £1,444: poor rates in 1848, £105. 11s. —Waterstock House, a fine mansion, surrounded by very pleasing grounds, is the seat of John Henry Ashurst, Esq., the descendant of an ancient family, founded by Adam de Ashurst, who, soon after the Norman Conquest, purchased from Roger de Layland all his lands in Dalton; and from that remote period to the present time the family have preserved an uninterrupted male succession; most of its representatives having filled very distinguished positions in their times. Mr. Ashurst, who was high sheriff of the county in 1810, is a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant for Oxfordshire.

WATFORD, HERTFORD, a parish and market town in the hun^d. of Cashio, liberty of St. Albans, union of Watford: the parish includes the hamlets of Cashio, Levesden, Oxhey, and Town: 18 miles from London (coach road 15), 4 from Rickmansworth, 7 from St. Albans. — Nor. West. Rail. to Watford station: from Derby, through Rugby to Watford, 116 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 and 11½ a.m.: post closes 11½ a.m. and 3½ and 9 p.m. — The name of this place, now become an important railway station, is derived from its situation on the ancient Roman road called Watling Street, close to a ford on the river Colne. The town chiefly consists of a well-built and well-paved street, nearly a mile in length, placed on a gentle ascent, and nearly surrounded by the Colne, on the banks of which there are several mills. The Grand Junction Canal passes within a mile, and that, with its railway advantages, gives Watford every facility of communication with all parts of the country. The church is a spacious structure, consisting of a nave, aisles, and chancel, with two chapels. A massive embattled tower rises to the height of 80 feet at the west end. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Huntingdonians, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. A free school was founded in Watford in 1704, by Mrs. Elizabeth Fuller, which now has endowments producing £178 per annum, part of which is expended in clothing the children. Another free school, founded by Mr. Francis Combe, has an endowment of £10 a year. Almshouses have been founded here by Sir Christopher and Lady Morrison, and Sir B. Hicks; and others for eight poor widows of Watford, Chenies, and Langley, in 1580, by the Earl and Countess of Bedford; the income of the former is about £55. 10s.; of the latter, £63. The other charities produce about £420 per annum, besides £100 a year left by Mrs. Russell for a lecturer. The county magistrates hold petty sessions here every Tue-day. The Watford poor-law union comprises six parishes, with a population of about 15,500 persons, spread over an area of about 57 square miles. — The living (St. Mary), a vicarage in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £21. 12s. 1d.: pres. net income, £730: patron, Earl of Essex: pres. incumbent, Hon. W. R. Capel, 1799: contains 10,980 acres: 986 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 5,980: do. in 1851, 6,580: ass^d. prop^r. £18,722: poor rates in 1848, £1,797. 6s. — Market day, Tuesday. Fairs: Tuesday after Trinity Sunday, and August 29 and 30, for cattle; September 9, statute. — Bankers: Smith and Whittingstall—draw on Curries & Co.

WATFORD, NORTHAMPTON, a parish in the hun^d. of Guilsborough, union of Daventry, in the line of the Union Canal: 91 miles from London (coach road 78), 5 from Daventry, 8 from Rugby. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, &c., 58 miles. — Money orders issued at Daventry: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — One of the schools here is endowed with £33 per annum. There are some strong chalybeate springs here. — The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a vicarage in the archd^y. of Nottingham, and diocese of Peterborough, is valued at £11. 7s. 8½d.: pres. net income, £296: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, H. W. Cottle, 1831: contains 3,080 acres: 62 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 415: ass^d. prop^r. £5,984: poor rates in 1848, £297. Tithes commuted in 1771. — Watford Hall is the property of Lord Henley.

WATH, NORTH RIDING, YORK, a parish, comprising the chapelry of Norton-Conyers, in the wapentake of Allertonsheire, and the chapelries of Melmerby and Middleton-Quernhow, with the township of Wath, in the wapentake of Hallikeld, on the banks of the river Ouse: 238 miles from London (coach road 216), 4 from Ripon, 8 from Thirsk. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and Leeds, to Ripon, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Ripon, &c., 108 miles. — Money orders issued at Ripon: London letters deliv^d. 9½ a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. — A school here was founded in 1690 by Peter Samwales, who endowed it with lands at Bellerby, which now produce £75 a year. £5 a year are also paid to the master by the authorities of Queen's College, Cambridge. An almshouse was also built here by Mr. Samwales for two poor persons, each of whom receives £2. 14s. per annum. The other charities produce about £5. 10s. per annum. — The living (St. Mary), a rectory in the diocese of Ripon, is valued at £17. 17s. 1d.: pres. net income, £981: patron, Marquis of Ailesbury: pres. incumbent, John Ward, 1850: contains 3,260 acres: popⁿ. in 1841, 709: ass^d. prop^r. £1,016. — The Hall of Norton-Conyers, which, with its grounds, constitute a remarkably fine domain, is the seat of Sir Bellingham Reginald Graham, Bart. This estate was at one time the property of the venerable Richard Norton, who, with his two sons, in 1569, engaged in a religious rebellion with the Earls of Westmoreland and Northumberland against Queen Elizabeth. The insurrection was soon suppressed. Mr. Norton and his two sons were executed, with multitudes of other persons, and the estates were granted to a person named Musgrove, by whom they were sold to an ancestor of the present proprietor. "Few families," says Sir Walter Scott, in his notes to the 'Lady of the Lake,' "can boast of more historical renown than the powerful family of Graham, who held extensive possessions in the counties of Dumbarton and Stirling, they having claim to three of the most remarkable characters in Scottish annals. Sir John Graeme, the faithful and undaunted partaker of the labours and patriotic warfare of Wallace, fell in the unfortunate field of Falkirk, in 1298. The celebrated Marquis of Montrose, in whom De Rets saw realised the abstract idea of the heroes of antiquity, was the second of these worthies; and notwithstanding the severity of his temper, and the rigour with which he executed the oppressive mandates of the princes whom he served, I do not hesitate to name as the third, John Graham of Claverhouse, Viscount of Dundee, whose heroic death in the arms of victory may be allowed to cancel the memory of his cruelty to the Nonconformists during the reigns of Charles II. and James II." The Grahams of Norton-Conyers, of whom we now speak, the Grahams of Esk, and the Grahams of Netherby, all derive their descent from their common ancestor, Sir Richard Graham, who was created a baronet in 1629, and whose second son, Richard Graham, Esq. of Norton-Conyers, was advanced to the same dignity in 1662, in consideration of his eminent services during the civil war. Of this latter gentleman the present baronet is a direct descendant.

WATH, NORTH RIDING, YORK, a township in the parish of Hovingham—(which see for access, &c.)—wapentake of Ryedale, union of Malton: 216 miles from London, 8 from New Malton, 8 from Helmsley. —Money orders issued at Malton: London letters deliv^d. 11 a.m.: post closes 1 p.m. —Contains 300 acres: 3 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 28: ass^d. prop^r. £261: poor rates in 1848, £4. 5s.

WATH-UPON-DEARNE, WEST RIDING, YORK, a parish in the northern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Rotherham, in the line of the Dearne and Dove Canal: it comprises the chapelrys of Nether Hoyland, Swinton, and Wentworth, and the townships of Brompton, Bierlow, and Wath-upon-Deerne: 179 miles from London (coach road 165), 6 from Rotherham, 7 from Barnsley. —Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and Sheffield, to Wath station: from Derby, through Sheffield, &c., 47 miles. —Money orders issued at Rotherham: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. —The church is a fine old structure in the Saxon style, with a peculiarly beautiful doorway. The Wesleyan Methodists have a place of worship here. One of the schools here is endowed with £17 a year; the other charities produce about £170 a year, £36 of which constitutes the revenues of an hospital at Wentworth. There are some extensive foundries, potteries, and collieries in the neighbourhood. A singular custom prevails here, of two farms in this parish, belonging to Earl Fitzwilliam, from one Easter day at 12 noon to the Easter day of the following year are reckoned in the parish of Mexborough, and in Wath-upon-Deerne for the same period alternately. —The living (All Saints) is a vicarage in the diocese of York; besides the mother church, there are five perpetual curacies, with stipends varying from £49 to £160: pres. net income, £315: patron, Christ Church, Oxford: pres. incumbent, H. Partridge, 1833: contains 11,120 acres: 1,310 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 6,000: ass^d. prop^r. £8,736: poor rates in 1848, £1,298.

WATLINGTON, NORFOLK, a parish in the hun^d. of Clackclose, union of Downham, near the navigable river Ouse: 94 miles from London (coach road 90), 6 from Downham, 7 from Lynn. —Nor. and East. Co^a. Rail. through Ely to Downham-Market, thence 6 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, Ely, &c., 134 miles. —Money orders issued at Downham: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m. —The church contains some ancient monuments, and several fragments of stained glass. The parochial charities produce about £17 a year. —The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a rectory in the archd^y. of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £14. 16s. 8d.: patron, C. B. Plastow: pres. incumbent, Edward Cobbold: contains 1,660 acres: 94 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 502: poor rates in 1848, £313. 14s.

WATLINGTON, OXFORD, a parish and market town in the hun^d. of Pirton, union of Henley: it comprises the hamlet of Warmscomb, and the liberty of Greenfield: 57 miles from London (coach road 45), 7 from Wallingford, 10 from Henley. —Gt. West. Rail. to Wallingford Road station, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through Rugby and Oxford to Wallingford, &c., 121 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. —The name of this place is supposed to have been derived from the Saxon term signifying "wattles," or "hurdles," referring to the mode in which the Saxons built their houses. The parish is situated on the old Roman road called Ikniel Street, between the two lines of highway from London to Oxford. It is irregularly built, the streets rather narrow, and the houses old; but there is a curious market-house in the centre, at the junction of four ways, built in 1644 by Thomas Stonor, Esq., who founded the grammar-school. The school is endowed with property which yields about £17. 10s. per annum; the other charities produce about £164 per annum, of which about £16 are applied to parochial purposes. Petty sessions for the division are held here every fortnight, and courts leet and baron are held every year in the school-room. At one time there was a castellated mansion here, erected in 1338, by Sir Nicholas de la Beche, which stood near the church, where indications of the moat by which it was surrounded may even now be traced. —The living (St. Leonard), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y. and diocese of Oxford, is valued at £12: pres. net income, £220: patron, Trustees of the late J. H. Tilson, Esq.: pres. incumbent, Wm. Langford, 1841: contains 3,440 acres: 356 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,855: do. in 1851, 2,060: ass^d. prop^r. £4,069: poor rates in 1848, £1,149. 13s. —Market day, Saturday. Fairs: April 5, and Saturday before and after Old Michaelmas. —Bankers: Branch of County of Berks Union Banking Co.—draw on London and Westminster Banking Co. —Watlington Park, the seat of Col. Tilson, contains about 300 acres, diversified by all the contrasts of hill and dale, and containing some of the finest beach-trees in the county.

WATTESFIELD, SUFFOLK, a parish in the hun^d. of Blackbourn, union of Stow: 97 miles from London (coach road 83), 12 from Bury St. Edmund's, 10 from Eye. —East. Co^a. Rail. to Mellis station, thence 6 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, and Norwich, to Mellis, &c., 199 miles. —Money orders issued at Bury St. Edmund's: London letters deliv^d. 10 a.m.: post closes 4 p.m. —The charities produce about £71 per annum, beside the rent of four acres of ground, which is applied to parochial purposes. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Independents have places of worship here. —The living, a disch^d. rectory in the diocese of Ely, is valued at £8. 11s. 8d.: pres. net income, £370: patron, Mrs. Morgan: pres. incumbent, R. Morgan, 1808: contains 1,790 acres: 73 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 601: ass^d. prop^r. £2,187: poor rates in 1848, £307. 18s.

WATTISHAM, SUFFOLK, a parish in the hun^d. and union of Cosford: 79 miles from London (coach road 70), 2 from Bileston, 6 from Hadleigh. —East. Co^a. Rail. to Claydon station, thence 6 miles:

from Derby, through London, &c., 211 miles. Money orders issued at Bildeston: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. The Baptists have a chapel in the village. The living is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Ely: pres. net income, £50: patron, King's College, Cambridge: pres. incumbent, Robert W. Bacon, 1846: contains 1,030 acres: 28 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 240: ass^d. prop^r. £1,381: poor rates in 1848, £118. 16s.

WATTLEFIELD, NORFOLK, a division in the parish of Wymondham—(which see for access, &c.)—hun^d. of Forehoe: 97 miles from London, 3 from Wymondham, 3 from Attleborough. Contains 85 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 500.

WATTON, NORFOLK, a parish and market town in the hun^d. and union of Wayland: 108 miles from London (coach road 91), 12 from Thetford, 7 from Hingham. Nor. and East. Co^r. Rail. through Ely to Thetford, thence 13 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, Ely, &c., 148 miles. Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 7.10 p.m. The town is situated on the borders of that part of the county commonly called Filand, or the open country. It suffered severely from fire in 1673, when nearly £10,000 worth of property was destroyed. In 1820, a neat obelisk was erected here, on the site of the old market-cross, on which the town's name was expressed by a W, a hare, and a tun. This cross was demolished, and the devices were placed in front of the bell-tower, a structure now called the Clock-house, from the circumstance of a clock having been erected here, at the expense of Mr. Edward Stevens. The town is lighted, and well supplied with water. Petty sessions are held here once a month by the magistrates for the county, and the lord of the manor holds a court-leet annually. The sheriff formerly held a court, called the Sheriff's torn, in a wood called Wayland Wood, celebrated as the reputed scene of the sad tragedy of "The Babes in the Wood." From this wood, the name of the hundred of Wayland is derived. The living (St. Mary), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^r. and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £7. 0s. 4d.: pres. net income, £187: patron, Trustees of W. Hicks (a minor): pres. incumbent, P. B. Jeckell, 1839: contains 2,000 acres: 207 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,188: do. in 1851, 1,248: ass^d. prop^r. £5,132: poor rates in 1848, £614. Market day, Wednesday. Fairs: July 10, October 11, November 8, first Wednesday in July, first Wednesday after Old Michaelmas. Bankers: Harvey and Hudson—draw on Hankey & Co.

WATTON, EAST RIDING, YORK, a parish in the Bainton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Hart-hill, union of Driffield; 191 miles from London (coach road 190), 5 from Great-Driffield, 7 from Beverley. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Boston, Grimsby, and Hull, to Beverley: from Derby, through Normanton, Selby, Hull, &c., 128 miles. Money orders issued at Driffield: London letters deliv^d. 11½ a.m.: post closes noon. From Domesday Book, we derive the following information with regard to Watton:—"Lands of the earl of Morton, in Wattune, Turchil and Milegrim, Orm and Gamel, had four manors of thirteen carucates to be taxed, and there may be seven ploughs.

Nigel has there three villains, with two ploughs, a church and a priest. Meadow half-a-mile long, and the same broad. The whole two miles long and one broad. Value in King Edward's time, £6, now 6s. Lords of the king's thanes,—manor. In Waton, Tored had three carucates of land to be taxed, the same has it himself. Land to two ploughs.' About the year 1148, the monastery was again founded by Eustace Fitz-John, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary. On the original foundation were supported thirteen canons and thirty nuns, which numbers were afterwards increased by subsequent donations. They were of the Gilbertine order, which had been recently introduced into England. The lordship of Watton was given to this monastery by the noble founder, for the good of his own soul and those of his friends and relations; which charter was afterwards confirmed by others granted by his wife, Agnes, the daughter of William Constable Cestriae, and others of the same family. The monks inhabited the same building, but their portion was separated from that of the nuns by a party-wall. As appears from a charter of Archbishop Murdac, the monks were appointed to 'serve the nuns perpetually in terrene as well as divine matters.' And it was probably for the more complete fulfilment of these pious purposes, that a subterranean passage secretly united those sacred edifices which the party-wall ostensibly separated. The saintly harem of nuns increased so greatly, that, in 1326, we find the archbishop of York consecrating no less than fifty-three at once. The character of this monastery for sobriety and regularity does not appear to have been of the most admirable description. According to Speed, the revenues in the 26th of Henry VIII. was £453. 7s. 8d., but Dugdale only estimates it at £360. 16s. 10½d. Robert Holgate, afterwards archbishop of York, was prior at the dissolution, which took place 9th December, 1540. The site was granted in the reign of Edward VI. to John, Earl of Warwick. We afterwards find it, in the reign of Elizabeth, in the hands of John Farnham. In the reign of James I. it was granted to Sir Thomas Earlsyne, Knight; and it finally passed into the hands of the Bethell family, who now possess it. The remains of the abbey as they now exist, are composed of brick and stone, and appear to have been rebuilt in the Tudor period. They consist of the abbey, a large and massive building, with towers and pointed arched windows, and an oriel window of imposing appearance: a nunnery, surrounded by a range of cloisters now gone to decay; the whole surrounded by a moat which formerly enclosed about twenty acres of land. The abbey, though much dilapidated, is still sufficiently perfect to arrest the attention of the antiquary. The interior is spacious and roomy, and some of the apartments have fine tapestry in them. The nunnery was converted into stables: it occupies about 11 acres. As usual with old abbeys and castles, there is a legend and haunted chamber connected with the building. In this parish there are two daily schools, chiefly supported by Richard Bethell, Esq. The church is a small edifice of brick, with a nave, chancel, and side aisles, with a low tower at the west end; but in the interior, there are several interesting monuments.---The living (St. Mary), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of the east riding and diocese of York, is valued at £10. 10s.: pres. net income, £60: patron, R. Bethell, Esq.: pres. incumbent, H. Jennings, 1839: contains 3,720 acres: 41 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 329: ass^d prop^y £5,906: poor rates in 1848, £293. 14s.

WATTON-AT-STONE, HERTFORD, a parish in the hun^d of Broadwater, union of Hertford, on the small river Beane: 27 miles from London (coach road 26), 5 from Ware, 5 from Hertford.---East. Co^a Rail. to Ware, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 159 miles.---Money orders issued at Ware: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m.---One of the schools here is partly supported by endowments, which, in the aggregate, amount to about £39 per annum. Many Roman relics have been found in the neighbourhood.---The living (St. Mary and St. Andrew), a rectory in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £19. 8s. 9½d.: pres. net income, £700: patron, A. Smith, Esq.: pres. incumbent, Hon. L. Barrington, 1850: popⁿ in 1841, 920: poor rates in 1848, £286.---Watton-Woodhall, the seat of John Abel Smith, Esq., occupies one of the finest situations in the county. The park attached to the mansion is large and delightfully diversified; the woods are very extensive, and contain many noble forest trees, with others of most luxuriant growth.

WAVENDON, BUCKINGHAM, a parish in the hun^d of Newport, union of Newport-Pagnell: 49 miles from London (coach road 46), 5 from Newport-Pagnell, 4 from Woburn.---Nor. West. Rail. to Bletchley, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through Rugby to Bletchley, &c., 89 miles.---Money orders issued at Newport-Pagnell: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m.---The charities, besides five rent-free houses, appropriated to poor widows, produce about £175 per annum.---The living (St. Mary), a rectory in the archd^y of Bucks, and diocese of Oxford, is valued at £26. 6s. 10½d.: pres. net income, £843: patron, H. C. Hoare, Esq.: pres. incumbent, Henry Burney, 1847: contains 2,880 acres: 158 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 846: ass^d prop^y £3,621: poor rates in 1848, £380. 1s.---The Hall, a fine domain, is the seat of Henry Charles Hoare, Esq., the eminent banker of London.

WAVERLEY, SURREY, an extra-parochial liberty in the hun^d of Farnham: 36 miles from London, 3 from Farnham, 7 from Godalming.---Waverley is situated on the bank of the water which runs from the Holt by Farnham to Tilford, where it joins the river Wey, and, indeed, may be considered as one of its heads.---Contains 9 houses.---At the foot of the hill which bounds the heath towards Farnham, lies Moor Park, formerly called Compton Hall, now the seat of Mrs. Jervoise. The mansion is a fine structure, surrounded by a park, extending over 400 acres, to which 60 acres more are attached of meadow lands, plantations, and gardens. This domain was formerly purchased by Sir William Temple, and it was here that that highly celebrated linguist, statesman, and author, passed the latter years of his life. The gardens, of which he speaks with so much plain eloquence, were in the Dutch style, with terraces and formal parterres, with a canal introduced between them. The gardens have been modernised, but the canal still remains. Near the eastern extremity of the park, there is a natural curiosity well worthy of notice. It was formerly called Ludwell, but now is known by the appellation of Mother Ludlam's Hole, and consists of a natural gush of pure transparent water through a grotto at the foot of the hill, which the stream has formed for itself. It formerly supplied Waverley Abbey, which stood at the distance of about half-a-mile from this spot, and of which some remains still exist. Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—William Giffard, bishop of Winchester, founded here, A.D. 1128, not far from his episcopal seat at Farnham, the first house which the monks of the Cistercian order had in England. This abbey was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary; had in it, about the time of the dissolution, 13 religious, and was endowed with £174. 8s. 3d. ob. per ann. clare; £196. 13s. 11d. ob. in toto. It was granted, with all the estates belonging thereunto, to Sir William Fitz-William, 28th Henry VIII. Sir William Temple was the son of Sir John Temple, and was born in London in 1628. He received his earliest instructions from his maternal uncle, Dr. Hammond, and completed his scholastic studies at Emanuel College, Cambridge. In his twenty-fifth year he commenced his travels, and subsequently passed six years in journeying through different parts of the continent. In 1665 he went on a secret mission to Munster, and after this was employed in accomplishing the triple alliance between England, Sweden, and Holland. He was eminently instrumental in promoting the marriage between William Prince of Orange, and Mary, daughter of James, Duke of York, afterwards James II., which union took place in 1677, and thus was he mainly instrumental in so greatly altering the destinies of his country and the faith that he professed. A change having occurred in the state of political parties here, he was recalled from Holland, and retired to Sheen in Surrey, where he employed himself in writing his "Observations on the United Provinces," and part of his "Miscellanies." Sir William subsequently filled several high offices, and among them that of Secretary of State. He died in the year 1700.

WAVERTON, CHESTER, a parish in the lower division of the hun^d of Broxton, union of Great Broughton, in the line of the Chester Canal: it includes the townships of Hatton, Huxley, and Waverton: 183 miles from London (coach road 179), 5 from Chester, 6 from Tarporley.---Nor. This latter place is now merely a hamlet of the former, but it at one time deserved a better designation, for it sent two members to parliament in the 34th and 35th years of Edward I., and has been honoured with various privileges by many of our kings. It now consists of about 25 houses, and over the river Ox, which runs through it, there is an old bridge of stone. It is conjectured that these places received their names from a wear which formerly existed on the river. —The living (St. Gregory), a vicarage in the archd^y of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, is valued at £12. 1s. 5½d.: pres. net income, £350: patron, Dean and Chapter of Bristol: pres. incumbent, H. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, York, and Durham, to Washington station, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 163 miles.

—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 and 10 a.m.: post closes 2.50 and 7.50 p.m. —This parish formerly included Sunderland within its boundaries, but by an act of parliament, obtained in 1719, it was constituted as an independent rectory. The living of the parish is a rectory with St. John's, in the archd^y and diocese of Durham; rated at £89. 18s. 1½d.; gross income, £3,346: net income, £2,899. Patron, the Bishop of Durham. The church was erected in 1807, on the site of an ancient edifice, said to have existed since the time of Athelstan. There are chapels-of-ease at Ryhope and Ford: see these articles. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1817; a Presbyterian in 1831; a Wesleyan Methodist in 1793; and a place of worship for the Methodists of the New Connexion. One of the daily schools is endowed by the rector for 100 males, and farther supported by small weekly payments from the children. Gibson's almshouses were founded, in 1725, for 12 poor persons: income, in 1830, £132 per annum. Bowe's almshouse was founded, in 1725, for 12 poor women: income, in 1830, £5 per annum. The Maritimé Institution, consisting of 10 almshouses for poor old women, was established in 1819-20, and endowed by the founder, Elizabeth Woodcock, with £3,333. 6s. 8d. consols, and £833. 6s. 8d. reduced annuities; the dividends on which are received by trustees, and disposed of according to the directions of the donor, under whose management the institution was then carried on: see also article SUNDERLAND. Minor charities, in 1830, about £5 per annum. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £4,143. 12s.; of the township, £3,444. 15s. In fact, the town of Bishop-Wearmouth forms a part of the town of Sunderland, being joined to it by a regular and continued street. There are four perpetual curacies here, of three of which the rector is the patron; Mrs. Gray of the fourth. The stipends vary from £65 to £100 a year. —The living (St. Michael), a rectory, joined with St. John's of Durham, a perpetual curacy, is valued at £89. 18s. 1½d.: pres. net income, £2,899: patron, Bishop of Durham: pres. incumbent, Hon. G. V. Wellesley: contains 8,880 acres: 2,519 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 27,515: do. in 1851, 28,000: ass^d prop^r £37,518: poor rates in 1848, £4,143. 12s.

It suffered in the Danish wars, and was burned down in the inroad made by Malcolm, king of Scotland, in 1070, but was afterwards begun to be rebuilt by Walcher, bishop of Durham, whose successor, William de Carilepho, about 1083, removed most of the monks to Durham, to which Wearmouth became a cell for three or four Benedictine monks. It was valued,*

26th Henry VIII., at £26, and granted, 37th Henry VIII., to Thomas Whitehead. The venerable Bede passed most of his monastic life in this institution, and, as it is believed, here wrote most of his history. The parish church is said to be as old, at least the greater portion of the edifice, as the year 634, and presents several remains of Saxon architecture. The Independents, Baptists, Presbyterians, and Wesleyan Methodists, have chapels in the village. The parochial charities are numerous. — The living (St. Peter), a perpetual curacy, with the curacies of All Saints and Southwick, is valued at £5. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £225: patron, Sir H. WEDGENOCK-PARK, WARWICK, in the parish of Leek-Wootton, Kenilworth division of the hun^d. of Knightlow. Mr. Edmondson, in his history of the Greville family, says of this place—"In the reign of Henry I., Henry de Newburgh, Earl of Warwick, in imitation of that king, who made a park at Woodstock, began making Wedgenock park, about two miles from his castle at Warwick. Whether it was finished by himself or his successors is not certain, but he was soon imitated in this piece of magnificence by others, and hence the waste of land for parks became so frequent in after ages among the nobility of England."

WEDGEWOOD, STAFFORD, a township in the parish of Wolstanton—(which see for access, &c.)—northern division of the hun^d. of Pirehill, in the line of the Grand Trunk Canal: 150 miles from London, 2 from Newcastle-under-Lyne, 2 from Burslem. Contains 18 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 132.

The name of the place was formerly

VOL. III.

Wet-Moor, from its neighbourhood being formerly under water for nine months in the year. It was anciently one of the residences of the West Saxon monarchs, and was given by Alfred the Great, together with his hunting-seat at Cheddar, to one of his sons. The church is a handsome structure in the early English style, with a tower rising from the transept to the height of 100 feet. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Baptists have places of worship here. The educational institutions are numerous. Wedmore is governed by a portreeve, chosen annually. The Duke of Chandos is lord of the borough, and holds a court-leet every year, at which the bread-weighers, ale-tasters, hay-wards, water-bailiffs, and constables, are regularly appointed. The appointment of water-bailiffs, and the discovery of a vessel below the ground while draining the neighbouring moor, have led to the supposition that this place was at one time a seaport. The living is valued at £20. 8s. 6½d.: contains 9,540 acres: 701 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £22,698: poor rates in 1848, £2,105. 15s. Tithes commuted in 1774. Fair: last Monday in September, for cattle and sheep.

WEDNESBURY (or WODENSBUURY, vulgarly called WEDGESBURY), STAFFORD, a parish and market town in the southern division of the hun^d. of Offlow, union of West Bromwich, near the source of the river Thame: 122 miles from London (coach road 118), 4 from Walsall, 8 from Birmingham. Nor. West. Rail. through Birmingham to Wednesbury station: from Derby, through Birmingham, &c., 51 miles. Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m. and 3 p.m.: post closes 8½ p.m. This place was anciently called Wodensborough by the Saxons, after their god of battles, Woden, and in the year 916, the Princess Adelfleda, who, for some years governed the kingdom of Mercia, built a strong castle or fortress here. After the Norman Conquest, the manor became a demesne of the crown, and Henry II. granted it to the family of Heronville of Woodstock. This was the birth-place of William, Lord Paget, the first of his family who bore the title, and who was secretary of state in the time of Henry VIII. The church is situated on the summit of a lofty eminence, commanding extensive views of the surrounding country, and it is supposed stands on the site of an old Saxon castle. It is a very pleasing edifice, in the later style of English architecture; but a new church has lately been erected in the parish. The parochial charities produce about £63 a year. The parish of Wednesbury has long been celebrated for its valuable coal mines, and for the ironstone found in its neighbourhood; the coal in this district being considered the best in England for a smith's forge, on account of the intense heat which occurs during its combustion. The species of manufacture naturally partake of the qualities of its mineral productions. Smelting furnaces are consequently numerous in the vicinity of the town, and there are, beside, iron-rolling mills, a large manufactory of gun-barrel iron, and works for the formation of a peculiar kind of metal, called blond, which is chiefly used for horse-shoes, hammers, axes, &c. A reddish earth, called kipp, is also found in the neighbourhood, which is largely used for the glazing of vessels of various kinds of earthenware. The trade of the town is largely facilitated by the Birmingham and Walsall Canal, which has a branch up to the town, and still more, of late years, by the lines of railway with which the town is connected. During the war, Wednesbury was the greatest producer of musket locks in the United Kingdom, most of them being sent for the use of the Birmingham manufacturers.---The living (St. Bartholomew), a disch^d vicarage in the diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £4. 3s. 4d.: pres. net income, £350: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, J. Clarkson, 1829: contains 2,190 acres: 1,492 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 19,105: do. in 1851, 20,500: ass^d. prop^r. £7,614: poor rates in 1848, £1,905. 19s.---Market day, Friday.---Fairs: May 6, and August 3, for cattle.---Bankers: Samuel Addison and Son---draw on Lubbock and Co.

WEDNESFIELD, STAFFORD, a chapelry and township in the parish and union of Wolverhampton---(which see for access, &c.)---southern division of the hun^d. of Offlow, on the Wyreby and Essington Canal: 126 miles from London, 3 from Wolverhampton, 5 from Wednesbury.---Money orders issued at Wolverhampton: London letters deliv^d. 6½ a.m.: post closes 6 p.m.---In Domesday Book, this place is called Wodensfelde, from the Saxon god of war, Woden, and is enumerated among the lands given to the monastery of Wulfruna. The site is remarkable as having been the place where a great victory was gained over the Danes by Edward the Elder. The chapel, which was erected about the year 1760, is a very neat structure. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel in the village. Immense quantities of locks, keys, traps, and other similar hardware articles, are manufactured here for the merchants of Birmingham and Wolverhampton.---The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to Wolverhampton: contains 3,700 acres: 339 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £5,360: poor rates in 1848, £313. 5s.

Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says---St. Werburgha, about the year 680, turned the royal palace here into a monastery or numery, and probably for some time presided over the religious whom she placed in it. How long these nuns continued is not certain. Roger de Theboril, shortly after the Conquest, having given a moiety of his manor of Wedon to the abbot and convent of Bec in Normandy, they erected an alien priory here, which Henry VI., in the 22d year of his reign, made part of the endowment of Eaton College. The church is a pleasing edifice, built at different periods. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship here. One of the schools here is endowed with £105 a year; the other charities produce about £37 a year. Weedon has been made one of the most extensive military depots in the kingdom, having been furnished with all the appliances of a great military store, and is believed capable of receiving 200,000 stand of arms, and a great quantity of warlike stores are generally contained within its vaults. The Grand Junction Canal communicates with the storehouses, and the railway passes close to them.---The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^r. of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, is valued at £11: pres. net income, £240: patron, T. But that Weighton-Market is of great antiquity is very evident, for near to it several barrows have been discovered, which are apparently of Danish origin; and there is good reason for believing that this was the scene of a fierce contest between the Saxons and the Danes. The town, which has of late years been much modernised, consists of one principal street, with many smaller ones intersecting it. The church, which is situated near the centre of the place, is a very handsome structure, consisting of a nave, aisles, and a chancel, with a tower at the west end in the Norman style, having pinnacles at the angles. One of the schools here is endowed with £8 per annum; the townlands produce £50 per annum; the other charities produce about £72 per annum. —The living (All Saints), a disch^d. vicarage, with the curacy of Shipton, in the diocese of York, is valued at £4. 13s. 9d.: pres. net income, £176: patron, the Prebendary thereof: pres. incumbent, N. WELL-HAUGH, NORTHUMBERLAND, a township in the parish of Falstone—(which see for access, &c.)—north-western division of the ward of Tindale, union of Bellingham: 306 miles from London, 12 from Bellingham, 5 from Falstone. Contains 48 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 338: poor rates in 1848, £166. 3s.

WELLINGBOROUGH, NORTHAMPTON, a parish and market town in the hun^d. of Hamfordshoe, union of Wellingborough, north of the navigable river Nene: 79 miles from London (coach road 67), 11 from Northampton, 11 from Thrapston. Nor. West. Rail. through Blisworth and Northampton to Wellingborough station: from Derby, through Weedon and Northampton to Wellingborough, 80 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 p.m.: post closes 10 p.m. The name of this place is derived from the numerous springs or wells by which it is surrounded, and the waters of which were considered so salubrious in their qualities, that, in the year 1626, Charles I. and his queen spent the whole of the summer season here, in order to partake of them at their source. In 1738, most of the town was destroyed by fire, but it has subsequently been entirely rebuilt. It stands on the slope of a hill which rises about a mile to the north from the river Nene. Wellingborough consists of several clean and well-lighted streets, all diverging from the market-place, the houses being chiefly constructed of red sandstone, which has a very pleasing and cheerful effect. The church is a fine edifice, with a tower and spire; the interior is spacious, and highly ornamented for monumental and architectural effect. It contains a handsome stone screen, and an admirable painted glass window, in which the Virgin Mary is represented with a crown upon her head, holding the infant child Jesus in her lap. Two Independent churches were formed here in 1688 and 1692; a Wesleyan Methodist in 1809; a Baptist; and a Friends' meeting-house. There are sixteen infant, six daily, and five Sunday schools in the parish. One of the infant schools is endowed by Mrs. Goodman with £3 per annum. Two of the daily are conducted on Lancasterian principles, and one is the free school, near the church, which has existed since the second of Edward VI., and was originally endowed with revenues belonging to a guild of the Virgin Mary, formerly attached to the church. Since then, however, it has received many bequests at different times; the funds are now pretty considerable, and are apportioned among the head and under masters by scotees, who act as trustees. The masters are appointed by all the inhabitants paying assessed taxes. Another of the daily schools is a charity one, the school-room of which was bequeathed in 1711 by John Freeman, Esq. Belonging to the school is land, which now produces about £150 per annum, left by Sarah Knight, Mary Roan, and John Robinson, including one-half of the rental of 45 acres of land, the other half being given to the free grammar-school, and to two parishioners, who require not to be in receipt of assistance from the parish. These funds are appropriated as the salaries of a schoolmaster and mistress, for the education of twenty-five boys and the like number of girls. The town estate and free school charity, whence the income of the free school arises, yield an income of £350. 18s. 2d. per annum, partly applied to municipal and other purposes. The church and poor lands yield £50 per annum, applied to parochial purposes; and other charities amount to about £84. 7s. per annum. The inhabitants of Wellingborough were formerly occupied in the manufacture of worsted stuffs, but are now chiefly engaged in the leading business of the county—the making of boots and shoes. Petty sessions for the division are held weekly in the town-hall. A workhouse has been built here by the commissioners, for the accommodation of 250 persons, at an expense of upwards of £5,000. The Wellingborough poor-law union comprises 27 parishes, with a population of about 21,000 persons, spread over an area of 84 square miles.—The living (All Saints), a vicarage in the archd^y of Northampton, and diocese of Peterborough, is valued at £24. 1s. 8d.: pres. net income, £400: patron, L. WELLINGTON (or WILLINGTON), NORTHUMBERLAND, a township in the parish of Wallsend—(which see for access, &c.)—Castle ward, union of Tynemouth, on the river Tyne: 3 miles from North Shields.—There are several collieries in the vicinity, and the village enjoys the advantage of an excellent quay, where there are several coal staiths, a fine ballast quay, advantageously situated on the river, and manufactories for ropes and other appliances necessary for carrying on a considerable business.

WELLINGTON, SALOP, a parish and market town in the Wellington or southern division of the hund^d of Bradford, union of Wellington: it contains the townships of Aston, Hodley, Horton, Ketley, Lawley, and Walcott: 146 miles from London (coach road 142), 11 from Shrewsbury, 7 from Shiffnal.—Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton to Wellington station: from Derby, through Birmingham, Wolverhampton, &c., 85 miles.—Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 9½ p.m.—The church, which has lately been rebuilt, is a spacious and elegant structure. The town stands about two miles from the ancient Wrekin, and the streets are pleasingly built, admirably paved, and well supplied with water. The Wesleyan Methodists, Independents, Baptists, and Roman Catholics, all have chapels here. One of the schools here is endowed with £4. 6s. 11d. per annum. The Duke of Cleveland, who is lord of the manor, holds a court here annually, at which the constables and other officers for the government of the town are regularly appointed, as well as for the different townships in the union of Bradford. The parish is well supplied with coal, and large quantities of ironstone and limestone are found in the neighbourhood of the village. Wellington has the advantage of excellent communication with the river Severn, and has, consequently, through these two units of prosperity, become an extensive manufacturing place, particularly for nails and other iron articles. Near to Wellington, at Admaston, two wells have been discovered, the one sulphureous, and the other chalybeate in its qualities. The waters have been found to be singularly efficacious in rheumatic complaints, and as the place is much frequented by visitors, a large inn, or hotel, has been built for their accommodation. The Wellington poor-law union comprises eleven parishes, with a population of about 18,000 persons, spread over an area of fifty-five square miles.—The living (All Saints), a vicarage united with Eyton, in the archd^y of Salop, and diocese of Litchfield—annexed there are two chapelries, both perpetual curacies; the first, that of Christ Church, is filled by the Rev. S. P. Robertson, who has a stipend under the patronage of the vicar of Wellington; the second, Ketley, filled by the Rev. T. Stoneham, is in the patronage of the Duke of Sutherland—is valued at £9. 5s.: pres. net income, £842: patron, Eyton Rectory: pres. incumbent, B. WELLINGTON, SOMERSET, a parish and market town in the hun^d of Kingsbury, union of Wellington: 170 miles from London (coach road 148), 7 from Taunton, 12 from Collumpton.—Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol to Taunton, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 184 miles.—Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m.—The town consists of several streets, the principal of which is upwards of a mile in length. The church is a fine structure, having an embattled tower, decorated with pinnacles; it contains a fine monument to the memory of Sir John Popham; and in the western part of the town, a new chapel of ease has lately been erected by the Rev. W. P. Thomas, at his own expense; it is dedicated to the Holy Trinity. The Independants, Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. The inhabitants of Wellington were at one time largely engaged in the manufacture of woollen cloths, and the business is still carried on to a considerable extent in the parish. Almshouses were built in 1604, for six poor men, and the same number of poor women, by Sir John Popham, who endowed them with property, which now produces upwards of £145 a year. A workhouse has been built here, by the poor-law commissioners, at an expense of £7,640, which is capable of accommodating 300 persons. Near the town there is a noble pillar, erected by public subscription, to his Grace F.M. the Duke of Wellington, who derives his noble titles from this place. The Wellington poor-law union comprises 24 parishes, with an aggregate population of about 2,000 persons, spread over an area of 90 square miles.—The living (St. John the Baptist) is a vicarage, with the curacy of West Buckland and Trinity, in the diocese of Bath and Wells: pres. net income, £894: patron, Rev. The town consists principally of two streets, which wind through the salt marshes, for two miles in length, towards the German Ocean; but the entrance to the harbour is rendered difficult by the gradual accumulation of silt; it has, however, of late been considerably improved, under the inspection of a body of harbour commissioners. The church is a fine structure, having a nave, a side aisle, a chancel, and tower. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, have chapels in the town. The free school was founded in the 17th century by Mr. Christopher Ringsey, and endowed with property, which now produces £120 per annum. The other charities produce about £18 a year. The number of the vessels belonging to the port is about 40; but all are of small tonnage. The county magistrates hold courts of petty sessions here once a fortnight, and the steward of the lord of the manor holds courts leet and baron annually. The common was made enclosed land in the year 1811. — The living (St. Peter), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £26. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £738: patron, J. R. Hopper, Esq.: pres. incumbent, N. Hill, 1806: contains 1,606 acres: 734 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,504: do. in 1851, 4,004: ass^d. prop^y £4,471: poor rates in 1848, £873. 18s. — Fair, Shrove-Tuesday.

WELLS, SOMERSET, a city and borough, locally situated in the hun^d. of Wells-Forum, union of Wells: 123 miles from London, 17 from Bath, 19 from Bridgewater. — Gt. West. Rail. to Bath, thence 17 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Bristol to Bath, &c., 160 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 5½ p.m.: post closes 6.55 p.m. — The history of the town is comprised in the history of the diocese, and we may therefore proceed at once to say that the collegiate church was founded by Ina, king of the West Saxons, and endowed with large estates by Eynewulf, who appears to have been the first benefactor. The city was first erected into a bishopric in the time of Edward the Elder, about the year 905. The early history of this see is exceedingly obscure. From various authorities it would appear that Aldhelm, abbot of Glastonbury, was the first bishop; but on the interference of the Norman invasion by William, much confusion arose, and the see was for several years publicly put up for sale. William Rufus, always eager for gain, sold it to John de Villula, who for some years had followed the practice of physic at Bath. Soon as he obtained his dignity, Villula removed the diocese from Wells to Bath, a circumstance which was the cause of a long and bitter animosity between the inhabitants of the two cities. Villula dropped the title of Bishop of Wells, and assumed that of Bath only; but his successor, Bishop Robert, about the year 1139, decided that the diocesan should be styled Bishop of Bath and Wells, and be enthroned, on his admission, in both churches. De Villula built a new church at Bath, being the structure which preceded the present abbey church. At Wells, however, he allowed the cathedral to fall to ruin; and also gave great offence to the canons, by pulling down a cloister, hall, and lodging-place, which Bishop Giso had built for them, and erecting a residence for himself on their site. De Villula died in 1123, and was succeeded by Bishop Robert, who repaired or rebuilt the cathedral which his predecessor had allowed to go to decay. After him Reginald Fitz-Joceline, archdeacon of Salisbury, was appointed to the see. This prelate—who was afterwards elected archbishop of Canterbury, though he died before his actual removal to that see—obtained from Richard I. a grant, giving him and his successors the right of keeping dogs for hunting over all the county of Somerset, as fully as any of his predecessors had ever enjoyed the same. In 1205 Joceline de Welles received the mitre. Under his episcopate, the monks petitioned the court of Rome to be restored to their ancient government by an abbot—an indulgence which they obtained, on condition of relinquishing to the bishop a considerable portion of their revenue. Joceline then assumed the title of Bishop of Bath and Wells, which has ever since been retained by his successors. For some time after the death of Joceline, the monks of Bath frequently elected the bishops, thereby giving rise to great dissatisfaction on the part of the canons of Wells. The dispute was finally settled by an appeal to the Pope, who decided that the right should be divided equally between both parties. At the Reformation, the chapter of Bath was dissolved; and the election of the bishops has ever since been vested in the dean and chapter of Wells. At the dissolution, the monastery of Wells was said to have been worth £1,939. 12s. 8d. per annum. The ecclesiastical establishment now consists of a bishop, a dean, who is also canon-residentary, and in right of his dignity has a residence not belonging to the chapter, and six other canons-residentary, who take equal shares of the surplus net revenue; the average sum so divided being £6,445. There are four priest-vicars, who are a corporate body, whose average revenue is £330; and forty-two prebendaries, who have their separate revenues. There are, besides, a subdean, precentor, chancellor, and treasurer. The diocese of Bath and Wells consists of the county of Somerset, with the exception of the large parish of Bedminster, which adjoins the city of Bristol, and has been transferred to the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol. The cathedral church, which is dedicated to St. Andrew, is a magnificent cruciform structure, at the eastern extremity of the city, built principally in the early English style of architecture. Its foundation was laid by Wyffeline, second bishop of Wells, but it was most probably rebuilt in the time of Henry III. by Joceline, the 21st bishop, the entire of the body of the church, from the west end to the middle of the present choir, being supposed to be his work. The two western towers were subsequently added; that on the south about the end of the 14th century, by Bishop John de Hareweld, and that on the north about twenty years afterwards, by Bishop Bulwith; but before this the eastern portion of the church, with its tower, had been completed by the then resident bishop, Drokensford. The most remarkable portion of the building is in the west front, which is covered with elaborate sculpture of light and airy design, with statues of apostles, kings, queens, popes, cardinals, bishops, and abbots. In the centre and highest tier are the twelve apostles; below which is a sculptured representation of the Resurrection in high relief, but of grotesque and monstrous composition. Notwithstanding the mutilation which nearly all of these sculptures have undergone, the effect of so vast a throng of figures, and of the elaborate decoration of every niche and buttress, is rich in the extreme,—and every beholder will admit, with Camden, that it is “a most excellent and goodly piece of work indeed.” The central tower is of large dimensions, but from the elegance of its construction has a light appearance. It is crowned with a pierced parapet, and decorated with lofty pinnacles. Each of the western towers is pierced with fine windows, and ornamented with lofty canopies rising from the buttresses. The nave is separated from the aisles by eighteen, nine on each side, clustered columns supporting pointed arches. It is lighted from the sides by clerestory windows, and from the west by a magnificent window of stained glass. The choir is 108 feet in length. The glory of the cathedral is usually considered to be the Lady chapel. In it the columns are formed of clusters of slender and elegant shafts, crowned with capitals of exquisite richness and beauty. The length of this architectural gem is 52 feet; its breadth, 35. The ancient font is preserved in the south transept. In the centre of the nave was interred King Ina; and in the middle of the choir is the grave of Bishop Joceline. In a chapel, in the presbytery, is the tomb of Bishop Beckington, on which is his effigy in alabaster. To the south of the building are the cloisters, forming three sides of a quadrangle, the western side of which was built by Bishop Beckington; the southern, by Thomas Henry, treasurer of Wells and archdeacon of Cornwall; and the eastern by Bishop Bubwith. The chapter-house is an octagonal structure, measuring 52 feet every way, and 480 feet in circumference, the roof of which is supported by a beautiful clustered shaft of Purbeck marble. Underneath is a crypt with a curiously groined roof, and connected with the chapter-room by a singularly constructed staircase. The episcopal palace is an ancient castellated mansion, conveying “the idea of the sullen retreat of an ancient feudal chieftain rather than what it really is.” It is to the south of the cathedral. It is surrounded by a wall and moat, enclosing a space of seven acres, and communicates with the cathedral through a venerable gateway leading over a bridge. The great hall on the south side of the court, 120 feet by 70, is now in ruins, having been destroyed, in the reign of Edward VI., for the sake of the materials. The building called the Vicar’s Close was erected by Walter de Hull, some time canon of the cathedral here, but was greatly improved and enlarged, in 1348, by Bishop Ralph de Salopia. This last bishop built and endowed a college for the residence of the choristers and vicars at his private expense, which was afterwards enlarged and enriched by Bishop Beckington. The east and west sides are occupied by dwelling-houses; on the north are the chapel and library, and on the south is a wall with a buttery and similar offices annexed. The revenue of this college was estimated, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £72. 10s. 9½d. Not having suffered confiscation at the general dissolution of religious houses, it was remodelled in the reign of Queen Elizabeth. The deanery is situated near the west gate, which is an ancient edifice, and the principal entrance to the city on the road from Bath. It is a handsome structure, and was erected by Dean Gunthorp about the time of Henry VII. The out-parish of St. Cuthbert includes the greater part of the city and the adjacent hamlets, being about seven miles in circuit. Popⁿ in 1801, 2,068; in 1831, 3,438: ass^d prop^y in 1815, £20,498. While the in-parish is in the peculiar jurisdiction of the bishop, the out-parish is in that of the dean. The living is a vicarage, rated at £33. 13s. 6d.; net income, £830. It is in the patronage of the dean and chapter. The church is in the later style of English architecture, with an embattled tower of singular beauty, strengthened with angular buttresses, and crowned with pinnacles. The whole of the exterior is highly ornamented. The upper part of the tower, from the loftiness and lightness of the windows, has much of the character of a lantern. The interior, consisting of a nave, aisles, and choir, contains many ancient monuments and mural tablets. Several sepulchral chapels are distributed around it, some of which, from the style of architecture, are conjectured to be of more ancient date than the greater part of the church itself. There are chapels of ease at Hordington and at Coxley. The city is situated on the south side of the Mendip hills, by which it is screened effectually from the northerly winds. Its name is most probably derived from the numerous springs that supply the palace, and which abounds in the vicinity. Wells consists of four principal streets. On the northern side there are several excellent houses. The market-place is spacious and airy, standing on the eastern side, and forming a fine object from each of the approaches to the town. Wells is not a large place, but is a peculiarly interesting one. The conduit-house was built in the fourteenth century by Bishop Beckington, for the accommodation of the clergy; and the same bishop also erected, in 1450, an elegant cross here, which, however, was taken down and replaced by another in 1780. The town-house and market-house stand on the south-eastern angle of the area. The other necessary appendages to such a borough are amply provided in an adjacent district. Mr. Archd. Harper, in 1711, founded almshouses for five decayed woolcombers of the city. The endowment consists of property at present yielding about £70 per annum, from which the inmates receive 5s. per week during the summer, and 1s. per week additional during the winter. The buildings comprise apartments and a common room. In 1704, William Brittain bequeathed in trust property, now producing £114 per annum, for various charitable objects, and in particular for apprenticing poor boys and maidens, inhabitants of the out-parish of St. Cuthbert's. In 1638, Mr. Walter Brick founded almshouses for four decayed burgesses. The income of this charity is about £100 per annum. In Priests' Row are almshouses, founded in 1614 by Henry Llewellyn. This charity has received several accessory bequests, and the endowment now yields about £170 per annum, which is appropriated to the support of six aged women inmates, and four aged widows not resident in the almshouses. Each of these has an allowance of 5s. 6d. per week; 5s. yearly for coal; 12s. 6d. on St. Thomas's day; and £1 every two years for clothes. The inmates have a sitting-room and bed-rooms each, with a small garden. Bishop Bubworth, who died in 1424, founded here an hospital for eighteen aged men and women, and a chaplain; which hospital received additional endowments from Bishops Still, Beckington, and Bourne. The endowment amounts at present to about £400 per annum, from which each of the inmates—now twenty-eight in number—receives a weekly dole of 4s. 6d. in summer, and 5s. in winter, with a supply of coal, clothes, and other necessaries. The buildings comprise a small chapel, a common kitchen, and separate apartments for each of the inmates. In 1649, Augustine Jefferies bequeathed lands, yielding about £16 a year, for the relief of poor decayed burgesses. Margaret Barkham, by bequest in 1654, Adrian Hickey, by bequest in 1675, and Philip Hodges, by bequest in 1723, founded the united charity school, and endowed it with property, now yielding about £500 per annum. In this school are educated thirty-four boys and thirty girls: of the boys, twenty are considered as on the foundation, and as such supplied with clothes from the funds, but none of the thirty-four are boarded or fed at the expense of the charity; the girls are taught needlework, and placed out at service. A premium of £10 is given with each boy on entering his apprenticeship, and an additional sum of £10 at the termination of the fourth year of servitude, if the boy remains with his master, and the master's conduct is approved. At the expiration of the term of indenture each receives a sum of £5, on the production of a certificate of good conduct. There are several other minor charities. The city is not coincident in its boundaries with the town, for it comprises a large rural adjacent district, while the town extends in an easterly direction far beyond the limits of the ancient city; but the parliamentary and municipal boundaries are the same. Wells was first erected into a free borough by Bishop Fitz-Joceline, with the sanction of King John, and the council-books go back as far as the reign of Richard II. The income of the borough is about £450 a year. The magistrates of the county hold the Epiphany and Easter sessions here, and the assizes are held alternately at this place, at Bridgewater, and at Taunton. Wells has returned two members to parliament ever since the reign of Edward I. Among the distinguished personages who have been prelates of this see, are Cardinal Wolsey and Archbishop Laud. The Independents have a chapel here, the congregation of which was formed in 1789. The Baptists have also a chapel here. Popⁿ in 1841, 7,050: do. in 1851, 7,350: ass^d. prop^r. £2,253: poor rates in 1848, £629. 11s. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. WELSHPOOL (or POOL, anciently TRALLWEG), MONTGOMERY, a market town, borough, and parish, locally situated in the hund^d of Pool and Cawra

North Wales: the parish is divided into upper, middle, and lower sections: the upper contains the townships of Dysserth, Strydan-Fechan, Trallwm-Gollen, Tyddyn-Prydd, and Cyfronydd; the middle consists of the town of Welshpool; and the lower comprises the townships of Gynrog-Fawr, Llan-nerch-Huddol, Tref-nant-Fechan, and Welshtown: 187 miles from London (coach road 176), 7 from Montgomery, 8 from Llanfair. — Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton, Shrewsbury, and Oswestry, to Welshpool station: from Derby, through Stafford, Shrewsbury, &c., 102 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. — The town is pleasantly situated in a valley not far from the banks of the river Severn, and also in the vicinity of the Montgomery Canal, consisting, in fact, of two towns, called Pool Town and Welsh Town, which, with the contiguous district, go to make up the whole borough. The principal street, which rises upon a gentle eminence, has many excellent houses, and is well lighted with gas. The Ellesmere Canal flows a little to the eastward of the town, and the Severn is navigable to within a short distance during several months of the year. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the manufacture of flannels, and this place was formerly the grand mart for those articles, as many as £200,000 worth being sometimes sold at the annual fair. The church is a Gothic structure in the Norman style, and being built at the bottom of the declivity, its adjacent cemetery is nearly on a level with the roof. The Wesleyans, Independents, the Welsh Calvinists and Baptists, and the Primitive Methodists, all have chapels here. A grammar-school, called the Church School, is endowed with £9. 16s. a year for the teaching of ten boys; the other charities amount to about £20 a year. The borough is ten miles in length, and six in breadth, extending over the whole of the parish of Pool, except the parish of Cyfronydd, which lies detached, and includes portions of the parishes of Guilsfield, Castle-Caerinion, Buttington, and Beriew. Welshpool now contributes, with Llanyfyllin, Llanidloes, Machynlleth, Newton, and Montgomery, in returning one member to parliament. Welshpool was originally chartered in the time of James I.; under the Municipal Act, the borough is governed by two bailiffs, four aldermen, and twelve common councillors; the public income of the corporation is about £350 a year. The magistrates for the county hold the great sessions here every spring and autumn, and petty sessions for the hund^d. of Cawrs. The parish of Welshpool is united with twelve other parishes, for an administration of the poor-laws, separate from the jurisdiction of the commissioners. The inhabitants of these parishes combine to form a population of about 16,400 persons. — The living, a disch^d. vicarage, with the curacy of Christ Church, in the diocese of St. Asaph, is valued at £13. 5s. 4d.: pres. net income, £273: patron, Bishop of St. Asaph: pres. incumbent, William Clive, 1819: contains 856 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 4,626: do. in 1851, 5,326: ass^d. prop^{ty} £8,989. — Fairs: second Monday in March, third Thursday in April, June 5, first Monday after 8th July, Sept. 12, Nov. 16, Monday before second Wednesday in February, first Monday after Sept. 20, for butter and cheese;

new fair, first Monday in October. — Bankers: Beck & Co. (Shrewsbury and Welshpool Bank) — draw on Masterman, Peters, & Co.; North and South Wales Bank — draw on London and Westminster Bank. — Within the distance of about a mile and a half to the south-west of the town is Powis Castle, formerly called Castell Côch, the splendid seat of Earl Powis. It is constructed of red sandstone, and commands a beautiful view of the town and of the vale of the Severn; the prospect being terminated in the distance by the Freiddyn hills, on the summit of the loftiest of which stands Rodney's column. The style of the castle is quite baronial, there being inner and outer courts, and all the appendages of one of the olden halls or strongholds; but the pleasure grounds are laid out mostly in the formal and quaint manner of the Dutch. Attached there are hanging gardens, which are reached by flights of steps, bordered by heavy palisades. The park is extensive, and remarkable for the rich variety of sylvan scenery which it contains. The little dark pool, called Llyndy, from which the town is supposed to derive its name, is comprised within the domain, and lies within a short distance of the private gate that opens into the High Street. Castell Côch was the ancient residence of the princes of Powis, and passed by the marriage of the last heiress of the line to the Charltons of Apley; but it was again transferred by marriage to the family of Grey, by one of whom it was sold to the Herberts, whose present representative is the Earl of Powis. His lordship, Edward Arthur Herbert, Viscount Clive of Ludlow, Baron Herbert of Cherbury, Baron Clive of Walcot in Shropshire, and Baron Powis of Powis Castle, in the county of Montgomery, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, and Baron Clive of Plassey in the peerage of Ireland, derives his descent from an ancient family which had long been settled in Shropshire, in the time of Henry II. One of them, Sir George Clive, Knt. of Huxley and Styche, was chancellor of the Exchequer in Ireland, and from him was descended Robert Clive, Esq., who was born in 1726, and while very young, entered the service of the Hon. East India Company in a civil capacity, but subsequently adopting the military profession, after many most gallant achievements, attained great renown, station, and fortune, as a commander. Having reached the rank of major-general, he was raised to the peerage of Ireland by the titles of Lord Clive and Baron of Plassey. Edward his heir, the second baron, was further ennobled by the title of Baron Clive of Walcot, and in 1804 elevated to the earldom of Powis. Of that nobleman the present peer is the grandson, having succeeded to the title and estates in 1843, on the death of his father.

During the war, Wem sided with the parliament, and endured an unsuccessful attack from the royalist forces under Lord Capell, whom the inhabitants completely repulsed. In the year 1677, a dreadful conflagration occurred here, when the church, market-house, and a number of other buildings were destroyed—the general loss being estimated at least at £23,000. The church was rebuilt in 1678-9, but contains scarcely anything of the original structure. The town consists of one long street, and several cross streets and lanes, standing near the banks of the river Roden; the two staple businesses of the town consist in the making of malt, and the manufacture of leather. The Independents, Presbyterians, and Baptists, all have chapels here. A free school was founded and endowed here in 1650, by Thomas Adams, Esq.; it has an income of about £350 a year, besides two exhibitions at the University, founded by Mr. Careswell. The other charities produce about £42 a year. Wem is under the jurisdiction of the magistrates of the county, but is immediately governed by two bailiffs, who have, however, but a very limited authority; a court-leet is held annually after Michaelmas, by the lord of the manor, and the other by the borough jury. The Wem poor-law union comprises 12 parishes, with an aggregate population of about 13,500 persons, spread over an area of 80 square miles. — The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a rectory in the archd^y. and diocese of Lichfield (a perpetual curacy has been added at Newton), is valued at £26. 4s. 4½d.: pres. net income, £1,767: patron, Duke of Cleveland: popⁿ in 1841, 4,119: do. in 1851, 4,300: poor rates in 1848, £899. — Market day, Thursday. After passing through the hands of several owners, it reverted to the Crown in the time of Edward III., and remained a royal appenage until the year 1564, when it became the property of Sir Francis Knollys, in right of Catherine, his wife. In 1660, it was purchased by the Hampdens. The celebrated patriot, Mr. John Hampden, represented this place in five successive parliaments. The church stands about a mile from the town, and there was formerly a chapel of ease, dedicated to St. John, which has long been desecrated. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists, have chapels in the town. Most of the operative portion of the female inhabitants of Wendover are engaged in the making of lace. One of the schools here was endowed in 1723 with £20 a year, by Mr. Hill, for the education of twenty poor children. As old as the time of the king of Mercia, in 680, a nunnery was established here, which shows that Wenlock was a place of much consideration even at that early period; but, like most other towns, it suffered much from the inroad of the Danish pirates. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—St. Milburga, daughter to King Merwald, founder of Leominster, and niece to Wolphere, king of Mercia, erected a nunnery here about the year 680, and presided as abbess over it. It was destroyed by the Danes, but restored by Leofric, earl of Chester, in the reign of Edward the Confessor; and being again decayed and forsaken, Roger of Montgomery, earl of Arundel, Chichester, and Shrewsbury, a person of vast possessions in these parts, rebuilt and endowed this monastery in the 14th year of the reign of William the Conqueror, placing therein a prior and convent of Cluniac monks, who were looked upon as a cell to the house of De Caritate in France, and suffered the same fate with other alien priories, till it was made 'prioratus indigena', in the 16th year of Richard II. It was dedicated to St. Milburgh, who was said to have been here buried, and in the 26th year of Henry VIII. had revenues to the yearly value of £401. 0s. 1d. clear, as Dugdale; and £434. 1s. 2d. in the whole; and was granted, in the 36th year of the reign of the same monarch, to Augustino de Augustines. Many portions of the ruins of this once opulent monastery still exist, although some of them are scattered at a considerable distance from its site. Thirty pounds for ship-money was levied on this place. The town consists principally of two streets, which run at right angles to each other; the houses being generally well built. The lord of the manor holds annual courts at Michaelmas and Easter, at the former of which the parish constables are appointed. One of the schools here is endowed with about £14 a year. Most of the Dissenters have places of worship within the precincts of the borough. These precincts comprise the extensive district called the franchise of Wenlock. This district consists of 17 parishes, viz.:—Beckbury, Badger, Broseley, Barrow, Benthall, Deuxhill, Ditton-Prior, Hughley, Linley, Madeley, Monk-Hopton, Shipton, Stoke St. Milborough, Wenlock (Little), Wenlock (Much), Willey, Eaton, together with the extra-parochial district of Posenhall. Several of these are separated from the other parishes of the franchise by intervening portions of the county, which are not subject to the jurisdiction of the corporate magistrates. The population of the whole borough, in 1851, amounts to about 18,000, of which the two parishes of Madeley and Broseley contribute 10,100. The municipal commissioner reported that these two parishes form a portion of the coal field, which extends beyond Wellington, and they contain nearly all the mining and manufacturing population of the borough, and have therefore very little community of feeling or interest with the other 15 parishes, which contain an agricultural population of between 7,000 and 8,000, spread over a very extensive district. With the adjoining parish of Dawley, however, which is also in the coal field, they form a dense mass of population of similar character and habits; and from these circumstances may, with great propriety, be comprised under one system of municipal government. They therefore proposed that the limits of the future borough should comprise the three parishes of Dawley, Madeley, and Broseley. Much-Wenlock was first incorporated in the time of Edward IV., and has gradually grown into importance through the mineral productions of the neighbourhood. — The living (Holy Trinity), a vicarage in the diocese of Hereford, is valued at £12. 9s. 7d.: pres. net income, £180: patron, Sir W. W. Wynne: pres. incumbent, W. H. Wayne, 1842: popⁿ in 1841, 3,074: do. in 1851, 3,800. — Market day, Monday. WENSLEY, NORTH RIDING, YORK, a parish and township in the western division of the wapentake of Hang, union of Leyburn: 259 miles from London (coach road 235), 3 from Middleham, 2 from Leyburn. — Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, York, and Northallerton, to Bedale, thence 13 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 137 miles. — Money orders issued at Middleham: London letters deliv^d at noon: post closes 1 p.m. — The parish is situated on both banks of the river Ure; and Leland, in speaking of this place, says—The fayre bridge of three or four arches that is on Ure, at Wencelaw, a mile or more above Middleham, was made 200 yer ago and more by one called Alwynne, parson of Wencelaw. It has recently undergone repair, and been enlarged, at the expense of the North Riding. Bolton Hall, which was built in 1618 by the Marquis of Winchelsea, first duke of Bolton, is a handsome edifice, and stands nearly in the centre of Wensley-dale. Some remains of Bolton Castle, which was built by Richard le Scrope, chancellor of England in the reign of Richard II., still exist on the brow of a hill, on the northern side of Wensley-dale. Richard granted license to Richard le Scrope to found a chantry of six chaplains in this castle, and endowed it with the yearly rent of £106. 13s. 4d. The castle was for some time the place of imprisonment of Mary of Scotland; until Elizabeth, suspecting Lord Scrope's fidelity, from his connection with the turbulent Duke of Norfolk, removed the Scottish Queen to Tutbury Castle, and placed her under the guardianship of the Earl of Shrewsbury. During the civil wars, the castle long held out for the royal cause, under Lord Scrope and a party of the Richmond militia; but at last surrendered on honourable terms, Nov. 5th, 1645. — The living (Holy Trinity) is a rectory in the diocese of Ripon, with two curacies annexed, in the patronage of the vicar: pres. net income, £1,337: patron, Lord Bolton: pres. incumbent, John Orde, 1839: contains 13,930 acres: 548 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,486: do. in 1851, 2,700: ass^d. prop^r £14,006: poor rates in 1848, £577. 2s.

WENTBRIDGE, WEST RIDING, YORK, a hamlet, partly in the parish of Badsworth, partly in that of Darrington, and partly in that of Kirk-Smeaton—(which see for access, &c.): 174 miles from London, 5 from Pontefract, 12 from Doncaster.

WENTNOR, SALOP, a parish in the hun^d. of Purslow, union of Clun: 172 miles from London (coach road 157), 5 from Bishop's-Castle, 6 from Church-Stretton. — Nor. West. Rail. through Wolverhampton to Shrewsbury, thence 15 miles: from Derby, through Stafford, Shrewsbury, &c., 87 miles. — Money orders issued at Bishop's-Castle: London letters deliv^d. 10½ a.m.: post closes 2 p.m. — The living (St. Michael), a rectory in the archd^y. of Salop, and diocese of Hereford, is valued at £7. 2s. 11d.: pres. net income, £189: patron, Christ Church, Oxford: pres. incumbent, Thos. Hunt, 1816: contains 4,190 acres: 120 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 715: ass^d. prop^r. £3,026: poor rates in 1848, £222. 14s.

WENTWORTH (or WINGFORD), CAMBRIDGE, a parish in the southern division of the hun^d. of Witchford, union and Isle of Ely: 76 miles from London (coach road 68), 4 from Ely, 12 from St. Ives. — East. Co^a. Rail. to Ely, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, Ely, &c., 116 miles. — Money orders issued at Ely: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. — The living, a rectory, a peculiar in the diocese of Ely, is valued at £10: pres. net income, £286: patron, Dean and Chapter of Ely: pres. incumbent, G. Peacock, 1847: contains 1,520 acres: 30 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 155: ass^d. prop^r. £2,232: poor rates in 1848, £142. 4s.

WENTWORTH, WEST RIDING, YORK, a chapelry and township in the parish of Wath-upon-Deerne—(which see for access, &c.)—northern division of the wapentake of Strafforth and Tickhill, union of Rotherham: 164 miles from London, 5 from Rotherham, 7 from Barnsley. — Money orders issued at Rotherham: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — The chapel is a small but neat building, with an embattled tower; it contains several monuments to different members of the Fitzwilliam family. — The living, a perpetual curacy, annexed to Wath-upon-Deerne, is valued at £27. 10s. 5d.: contains 2,830 acres: 258 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £13,354: poor rates in 1848, £396. 3s. Tithes commuted in 1840. — In the immediate neighbourhood of the chapel is Wentworth House, a magnificent structure, containing numerous apartments of noble dimensions, and surrounded by an extensive park, beautifully varied in its characteristic undulations, enriched with the finest forest trees, and containing the family mausoleum of its noble owner, the Earl Fitzwilliam, with an admirable monument of his ancestor, the celebrated minister of state, the Marquis of Rockingham. The mansion is replete with the most valuable works of the old masters in the fine arts; and the façade presents the most imposing structure in the West Riding of Yorkshire. Charles Wentworth Fitzwilliam, D.C.L., Viscount Milton of Norborough, in the county of Northampton, and Lord Fitzwilliam, Baron of Milton, in the peerage of England, Earl Fitzwilliam, Viscount Milton, and Baron Fitzwilliam of Lifford, in the peerage of Ireland, succeeded to the title and estates, as fifth earl, on the decease of his father, in 1833. His lordship derives his later descent from Hugh Fitzwilliam, Esq., of Sprotsburgh, who collected the family records somewhere about the year 1565, from which it appears that the family trace their descent from Sir William Fitz-Godric, a cousin of King Edward the Confessor. From him was descended Sir William Fitzwilliam, Lord of Elmley and Sprotsburgh, who was living about the year 1117. From him was descended Sir William Fitzwilliam, who, during the reign of Queen Elizabeth, was five times lord-deputy of Ireland. The grandson of that eminent personage, William Fitzwilliam, Esq., was elected to the peerage of Ireland by the title of Baron Fitzwilliam of Lifford, in the county of Donegal. The grandson of that nobleman was, in 1716, advanced to a viscounty and earldom of Ireland, by the titles of Viscount Milton of Westmeath, and Earl Fitzwilliam of the county of Tyrone. The grandson of that nobleman, again, was enrolled in the peerage of England by George II., with the titles of Lord Fitzwilliam, Baron Milton of the county of Northampton, and was, in 1746, farther elevated to the dignities of Viscount Milton and Earl Fitzwilliam of Norborough in the same county. Of that nobleman, the present peer, distinguished alike for the purity of his motives, the soundness of his intellect, and strenuous earnestness of his patriotism, is a direct descendant.

WEOBLEY, HEREFORD, a parish, market town, and borough, not incorporated, in the hun^d. of Stretford, union of Weobley: the parish includes two townships, viz., the township of the borough and the township of the foreign: 144 miles from London (coach road 147), 8 from Leominster, 8 from Kingston. — Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Worcester, thence 26 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham to Worcester, &c., 97 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. — The town is situated on the road from Knighton to Hereford, and consists principally of one street. The free grammar-school, at which children from Weobley, Wormesley, and Wootton, in the parish of King's-Pion, are educated, is endowed with £50 a year, arising from a bequest made by Mr. William Crowe, in 1653. Another of the schools is endowed with £10 a year. The minor charities produce about £12 per annum. The Roman Catholics have a place of worship in the village. This borough formerly sent members to parliament, but was disfranchised by the Reform Bill. In the neighbourhood there are the remains of an ancient castle, which was held for some time by the adherents of the Empress Maud, but was ultimately taken by King Stephen. The petty sessions for the hundred are held here, and here the poor-law commissioners have built a workhouse, at an expense of something more than £3,000, for the accommodation of about 80 persons. The Weobley poor-law union comprises 26 parishes, with a population of about 9,000 persons, spread over an area of 71 square miles. — The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y. and diocese of Hereford, is valued at £9. 1s.: pres. net income, £236: patron, Bishop of Hereford: pres. incumbent, J. Rail. through Chippenham to Westbury station: from Derby, through Birmingham, Chippenham, &c., 169 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. — The town, which consists principally of three streets, stands in the centre of the parish, and is, upon the whole, but irregularly built. Broad cloths, kerseymers, and other woolen goods, are manufactured here to a very considerable extent, one of the houses generally employing upwards of a thousand workmen. Malt, however, is made in considerable amount for the supply of the surrounding district. The living is a disch^d vicarage, with the perpetual curacies of Bratton and Dilton annexed, in the peculiar jurisdiction and patronage of the precentor of the cathedral church of Salisbury; rated at £44. 16s. 3d.; net value of vicarial tithes, £238. The church is a venerable building. There are within the parish two chapels-of-ease, which are served by the incumbent and his curate. There are two Independent churches, and places of worship for the Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. Here is a school conducted on Lancaster's system, at which forty boys receive education. It is endowed with £1,000, the bequest of John Matravers, a member of the Society of Friends, who also left a similar sum for the purpose of clothing twenty poor women at Christmas, for which purpose several other benevolent individuals have bequeathed small sums. The borough includes the market-place, and the greater part of the town, within a circuit of two miles, together with some detached portions at Eden Vale and Knoll. The municipal body consists of a mayor, recorder, thirteen capital burgesses, with their subordinate officers. The mayor holds a court of frankpledge annually in November, and the steward of the lord of the manor a court-leet annually in May, at which two high constables are appointed. Westbury returned two members to parliament from the time of Henry VI. until the passing of the Reform Act, when the number was reduced to one. The Westbury and Whorwelsdown poor-law union comprises ten parishes, with a population of about 13,500 persons, spread over an area of 48 square miles. — The living (All Saints) is a vicarage in the diocese of Salisbury: pres. net income, £385: patron, Bishop of Salisbury: pres. incumbent, J. But Oswald, bishop of that see, in the year 983, replaced the monks, who being partly removed to Ramsey, and partly driven away by the wars, this religious house was, in the year 1093, re-edified to the honour of the blessed Virgin, the old possessions were recovered, new were added, and the monks restored by Wulstan, bishop of Worcester, who made it a cell to the priory of Worcester; but his successor, Bishop Sampson, in the reign of Henry I., revoked the said grants, and removed the monks. From which time, nothing occurs of any religious house in this place, till about the year 1288, when Godfrey Giffard, bishop of Worcester, endeavoured to make several churches in these parts of the patronage of the see of Worcester, prebendal to this of Westbury, which, after great opposition from the prior and convent of Worcester, he effected, and here became a college for a dean and canons (in the gift of the bishop of Worcester), dedicated to the Holy Trinity, which was afterwards augmented by the benefactions of John Carpenter, bishop of Worcester, who sometimes styled himself bishop of Westbury, Richard duke of York, King Edward IV., Sir William Cannings, Knt. (who was afterwards dean here), and others, so as to be valued, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £232. 14s., and was granted, 35th Henry VIII., to Sir Ralph Sadler. It was here that the Abbey of Stratford-Langthorne stood, which is thus described by Grose, in his Antiquities of England—"Of this abbey there are scarcely any remains, except a small building, which appears to have been the gateway leading to the monastery, and a small ruined stone arch. The site and remains of this once-celebrated monastery are about half a mile south-south-west of the church. It was founded in 1134, or 1135, by William de Montfichet, for monks of the Cistercian order, and dedicated to the Virgin Mary and All Saints. He endowed it with all his lordship here, under the manor of Westham, and also with 11 acres of meadow and two mills; his wood of Bochest in Woodford, and the tithe of his pannage. The demesnes of the abbey in this parish comprehended near 1,500 acres; and among them was Sudbury, given by King John. The manors of Westham, Wood-Grange, East Westham, and Playz, were theirs. They had also the manors of Eastham, of Beringers and Bye-house in Little Ilford and Berking; of Low-Leyton; of Bamstead in Aveley and Upminster; of Great Burghsted, Challeweden, Whites, and Gurneys; of Bucknars in Butesby; of Cowbridge in Mountenysing; of Caldicroots in South Weald; of Bryggings in Chaldwell, with many other lands; the rectories of East Ilford and Eastham: the vicarages of Westham, Langton, Great Burghsted, and Great Maplested; houses in London; the manor of Lewisham, and a messuage and lands at Woolwich; in the forest of Melkesham, Wilts, 472 acres; common pasture in Warsted; free warren in most of the parishes named above; a market and two fairs in Bellerica; pasture for 800 sheep, and liberties in Windsor forest. The house, being situated low among the marshes, was liable at first to frequent inundations, so that the monks were obliged to remove to a cell of theirs at Great Burghsted, where they continued till King Richard caused their damages to be repaired, and brought them back to Stratford. The abbot had summons to parliament in 1307. At the suppression, this abbey was valued at £573. 15s. 6d., according to Speed. As to the abbey itself, King Henry VIII., in 1538, gave the house and site, with the church, belfrey, and churchyard, and several parcels of ground thereto belonging, to Peter Meantis, Esq., and Joan, his wife, and their heirs male. Some of the considerable privileges of this abbey were obtained or purchased by Sir Thomas Campbell of Clay-hill in Berking. This abbey was bound to maintain the bridge at Bowe, said to have been the first stone bridge in the county." There is an almshouse here for four poor persons, endowed with 30 acres of land. — The living (St. Mary), a vicarage in the archd^y of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £21. 10s. 10d.: pres. net income, £347: patron, Earl of Burlington: pres. incumbent, H. WESTON-SUPER-MARE, SOMERSET, a fashionable watering-place and parish in the hun^d. of Wintertoke, union of Axbridge, on Uphill Bay, near the Bristol Channel: it contains the hamlets of Ashcombe and Milton: 138 miles from London, 9 from Axbridge, 17 from Bridgewater. Gt. West. Rail. through Bristol to Weston station: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 152 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 9½ p.m. Until within these few years, this was nothing more than a rude and obscure village, inhabited by fishermen, and having only a few of their huts scattered along the margin of the sea. Now it is a town of fashionable resort, numerous frequented during the bathing season, replete with every one of the appliances for social and domestic comfort, and well stored with the usual means for intellectual enjoyment. This it owes chiefly to the opportunity of access afforded by the Great Western Railway. At first sight, the general aspect of Weston-super-Mare would be but little inviting to the stranger, especially in gloomy weather, towards the close of the year, when the tides are low, and a long deep bank of mud pervades the shore; but when the tide is full, it is a delightful place. Around the town there are fine open downs, while the view is enlivened by the busy scene presented by Weston itself lining its capacious bay, surrounded by its rampart of stones, with the picturesque church on the summit of its lower declivity. Far off, in the distant horizon, across the waters, to which the numerous vessels sailing up and down give animation and cheerfulness, lie the lofty heights which give to Southern Wales their picturesqueness and beauty. The fishermen's huts have now almost entirely disappeared, and elegant mansions, with their highly cultivated grounds, have taken their place; while, in every year, with a fresh accession of visitors, the accommodations become more ample and refined. Villas have been built, and admirable hotels established. Near Anchor Head, about a quarter of a mile from the town, is the original bathing-place, formed by a natural opening of the rock upon a pebbly beach. It is secluded and romantic, and now exclusively appropriated to the private accommodation of ladies. On Knightstone rock, and elsewhere in this vicinity, there are hot and cold water and plunging baths provided for the comfort of the residents. There are some chalybeate springs in the neighbourhood. Knightstone and Birnbeck are islands, except at low water, at which time they are joined to the mainland by low causeways. A small pier has been erected at low water, at which the fishermen embark and land. The church is a modern edifice, situated on a commanding spot, on the acclivity of a hill towards Worlebury, accessible to carriages, and within an easy distance of the town. It is large, and consists of a nave with a square tower, chancel, and projecting chapel. The churchyard is elevated, with a handsome flight of circular stone steps. It commands an extensive and pleasing view of the town, bay, Brean-Down, Black-Rock, Uphill, Steep and Flat Holms, and Weston-Hill, with Worlebury camp. Here are meeting-houses for Independents and other dissenters. Money orders issued at Wigton: London letters deliv^d. 10½ a.m.: post closes noon. It is a place of great antiquity, having formerly been a Roman station, and is built upon the Roman road from Carlisle to Ellenborough, on the site of what was once old Carlisle. The parish contains large mineral deposits, which produce much employment for the inhabitants. There was at one time a hermitage here, the sanctity of which was held in such estimation that the monks built an oratory here. It was dedicated to St. Hilda, and was confirmed to the abbots and monks of St. Cuthbert in the reign of Henry III., being from its nature and position, of course, extra parochial; and from this foundation the parish arose. The living, a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Carlisle, is valued at £23: pres. net income, £120: patron, Dean and Chapter of Carlisle: pres. incumbent, Robert Wood, 1822: contains 13,120 acres: 229 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,311: do. in 1851, 1,511. The tithes were commuted in 1811.

The grounds around it are extensive, and delightfully varied by sylvan scenery. The house stands on the northern acclivity of a picturesque valley, extending from the height down to the margin of a rivulet, which expands into a lake that covers thirty acres. From this lake an aqueduct has been cut to another lake near the mansion. The drive through the plantations extends to the length of five miles, and the trees cover an area of 500 acres, for the timbering of which the late Berney Petre, Esq., received a medal from the Society of Arts. Not far from the mansion there is an obelisk ninety feet high, at the top of which there is a room which commands extensive views of the surrounding country and the coast.

WESTWOOD WITH IFORD, WILTS, a parish in the hun^d of Elstub and Everley, but locally within that of Bradford, union of Bradford, south of the river Avon, and the Kennet and Avon Canal: it contains the hamlet of Iford: 109 miles from London (coach road 102), 2 from Bradford, 3 from Trowbridge. — Gt. West. Rail. through Chippenham to Trowbridge, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham and Chippenham to Trowbridge, &c., 168 miles. — Money orders issued at Bradford: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. — The church is an ancient structure, consisting of a nave, chancel, and north aisle, with a square western tower. — The living is a rectory, annexed to Bradford — (which see for ecclesiastical and social statistics): contains 950 acres: 97 houses: ass^d prop^r £1,327: poor rates in 1848, £76. 18s. Tithes commuted in 1841.

WESTWOOD, WORCESTER, an extra-parochial liberty in the upper division of the hun^d of Halfshire, communicating with the Severn by the Droitwich Canal: 117 miles from London, 3 from Droitwich, 6 from Worcester. — Tanner, in speaking of this place, says — Eustachia de Say, and her son

Osbert Fitz-Hugh, having given the church, with other lands here, to the abbey of Font-Ebroid, or Fontevrauld, in France, in the reign of Henry II., here was shortly after a small priory, dedicated to the Blessed Virgin, for six nuns of the order of Fontevrauld, whose revenues were valued, in the 26th of Henry VIII., at £78. 8s. in the whole, and at £75. 18s. 11d. clear. The priory, and most of the lands belonging to it, were granted, in the 30th year of the same reign, to John Pakynton.

WETHERAL, CUMBERLAND, a parish, partly in Cumberland ward, and partly in Eskdale ward, union of Carlisle, on the river Eden, and including the townships of Cumwhinton with Coathill, Scotby, Wetheral, Great Corby, and Warwick-bridge; the two last in Eskdale, and the others in Cumberland ward: 305 miles from London (coach road 299), 5 from Carlisle, 7 from Brampton. — Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe and Lancaster to Carlisle, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 205 miles. — Money orders issued at Carlisle: London letters deliv^d 10.40 a.m.: post closes 1.35 p.m. — The church, which is a handsome edifice, appears to have been built about the reign of Henry VIII. Attached to it there is a small sepulchral chapel in the Gothic style of architecture, erected in 1791, by Henry Howard, Esq. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says — Here was a cell of a prior and eight Benedictine monks to the abbey of St. Mary at York, to which it was given by Ranulph de Meschin, Earl of Cumberland, either in the time of William Rufus or Henry I. It was dedicated to the Holy Trinity, St. Mary, and St. Constantine, and rat^d, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £117. 11s. 10d. according to Dugdale, and £128. 5s. 3d. according to Speed; and was granted, in the 33d year of the same reign, to the dean and chapter of Carlisle. There are still some interesting remains of the priory in existence, three of the cells being hollowed out of the solid rock. Three of the schools here are endowed with £20. 16s., £16. and £4. 5s. respectively. Alabaster, red gypsum, and freestone, are found abundantly in the parish. — The living (Holy Trinity) is a perpetual curacy, with Warwick, also a perpetual curacy, under the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Carlisle; and St. Paul's, also a perpetual curacy, under the patronage of P. Dixon, Esq.; incumbent, Rev. H. Nembhurd, 1846: pres. net income, £140: pres. incumbent, C. Vansittart, 1847: contains 10,620 acres: 523 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,451: do. in 1851, 3,500: ass^d prop^r £9,966: poor rates in 1848, £768. 18s.

WETHERAL, CUMBERLAND, a township in the above parish. — (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) — Contains 104 houses.

WETHERBY, WEST RIDING, YORK, a market town and chapelry in the parish of Spofforth, upper division of the wapentake of Claro: 225 miles from London (coach road 194), 13 from York, 12 from Leeds. — Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby, Derby, and Leeds, to Wetherby station: from Derby, through Leeds, &c., 93 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. — By the Saxons this place was called Waderbi, a term which signified to turn from its situation on an angle of the river Wharfe, which here suddenly changes its course;

hence the corruption, or rather the alteration, was an easy one. There was anciently here a preceptory of knights-templars, but on the abolition of that order in the time of Edward II. it was given by the pope to the knights-hospitallers of St. John, and in 1324 the grant was confirmed by an act of parliament. During the parliamentary war, Wetherby was garrisoned under the command of Sir Thomas Fairfax, their numbers amounting to about 340 horse and foot. Early one morning they were surprised by a body of 800 royalists, who had issued from the city of York. The garrison was surprised, but Fairfax, with the assistance of only four men, with consummate intrepidity, kept the assailants at bay, until some of his force was aroused; and the magazine happening to explode, the royalists retired from the conflict. Wetherby consists chiefly of one street, in the rear of which is the market-house. The living is a perpetual curacy under the rectory of Spofforth, formerly in the archd^y and diocese of York, now in the archd^y of Craven, and diocese of Ripon: rated at £18. 3s. 2d.: gross income, £98: patron, Colonel Wyndham. There is here also a Wesleyan Methodist church, formed in 1805; and a Calvinistic Independent. In 1833, there were six day schools in the parish, besides Sunday schools attached to each of the chapels. Charities, in 1836, 15s. per annum. The town, which has of late years undergone several remarkable improvements, under the auspices of the Duke of Devonshire, is situated in the midst of a fine agricultural district, and has consequently become an entrepôt for the produce of the surrounding country. On a high and commanding situation on the banks of the Wharfe, and near the centre of the curve which is here described, there are the remains of an ancient castle, though none are apparent above ground. Contains 2,040 acres: 267 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £3,727: poor rates in 1848, £480. 5s. Market-day, Thursday. Fairs: Holy Thursday, August 5, October 10, Thursday before November 22. Bankers: Branch of Yorkshire Banking Company—draw on Williams, Deacon, & Co.

WETHERDEN, SUFFOLK, a parish in the hun^d of Stow, union of Stow: 84 miles from London (coach road 80), 4 from Stowmarket, 7 from Ixworth. East. Co^r. Rail. to Stowmarket, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 216 miles. Money orders issued at Stowmarket: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. The charities produce about £21. 15s. a year. The living (St. Mary), a disch^d. rectory in the archd^y of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £6. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £371: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, R. J. C. Alderson, 1844: contains 2,060 acres: 100 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 515: ass^d. prop^r. £2,304: poor rates in 1848, £211. 7s.

WETHERINGSET, SUFFOLK, a parish in the hun^d. and union of Hartismere: it contains the hamlet of Brockford: 93 miles from London (coach road 85), 5 from Eye, 4 from Debenham. East. Co^r. Rail. to Mellis station, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, and Norwich, to Mellis, &c., 192 miles. Money orders issued at Eye: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. The charities, which chiefly arise from the town lands, produce about £115 per annum. The living (All Saints), a rectory, with Brockford, in the archd^y of Sudbury, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £33. 9s. 2d.: pres. net income, £604: patron, Rev. R. Moore: pres. incumbent, R. Moore, Jun., 1841: contains 3,980 acres: 124 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 1,065: do. in 1851, 1,115: ass^d. prop^r. £4,696: poor rates in 1848, £631. The Hall, a very handsome mansion in the Tudor style of architecture, is the seat of the rector, the Rev. R. Moore, M.A.

WETHERSFIELD. See WEATHERSFIELD.

WETTENHALL, CHESTER, a township and chapelry in the parish of Over—(which see for access, &c.)—first division of the hun^d of Overbury, union of Nantwich: 171 miles from London, 7 from Nantwich, 5 from Tarporley. Money orders issued at Nantwich: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. The living is a perpetual curacy, annexed to Over: contains 1,790 acres: 49 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £2,019: poor rates in 1848, £109. 13s.

WETTON, STAFFORD, a parish in the southern division of the hun^d of Totmonslow: 163 miles from London (coach road 147), 8 from Ashbourne, 9 from Leek. Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby and Derby to Brassington, thence 10 miles: from Derby, through Ambergate to Brassington, &c., 24 miles. Money orders issued at Ashbourne: London letters deliv^d. 10 a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. The church, the body of which was a very ancient structure, was rebuilt, with the exception of the tower, in the year 1820, at an expense of £600. The parish lies within the honour of Tutbury, and the duchy of Lancaster. Mr. White, in his History of Staffordshire, says of Wetton—"About half a mile north of the village, at Ecton Hill, there is a copper mine which was first worked in the seventeenth century, and for many years produced a yearly profit of £30,000 to the Duke of Devonshire; but the ore having become scarce, it was given up by his Grace some years ago, and let to a small company of working miners, who still find a tolerable remuneration for their labours. This hill is about 230 yards high, and the diameter of its base half a mile. The entrance to the mine is at the base, near the bank of the Manyfold, where a passage is made, 400 yards in length, and 6 feet high, into the centre of the hill, strongly walled on each side. From the centre another passage leads to the summit, where there is a lodgment of timber for receiving the ore. This mine formerly yielded about 300 tons of pure copper annually; and on the opposite side of the hill there was a prolific lead mine, now exhausted. Near it, in a lofty and precipitous cliff which rises above the Manyfold, is the stupendous cave called 'Thor's-house cavern.' Here are quarries of excellent marble and variegated limestone. Near Casterton, on the south-east side of the parish, is Clamps-in-the-Wood, a farm-house embowered within the windings of a circular hollow in the hills, and secluded, like the happy valley of Rasselas, from the rest of the world." One of the schools here is endowed with £4 a year. The living (St. Margaret), a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Lichfield, is valued at £7. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £90: patron, M.

Burgoynes, Esq.: pres. incumbent, W. M. Ward, 1828: contains 2,600 acres: 101 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 485: ass^d prop^r £2,484: poor rates in 1848, £183. 4s.

WETWANG, EAST RIDING, YORK, a parish, partly in the liberty of St. Peter of York, and partly in the wapentake of Buckrose, union of Driffield: it includes the township of Wetwang, and the chapelry of Fimber: 203 miles from London (coach road 198), 5 from Great Driffield, 12 from Pocklington. — Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Boston, Grimsby, and Hull, to Great Driffield, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Normanton, Hull, &c., 136 miles. — Money orders issued at Driffield: London letters deliv^d at noon: post closes at noon. — The church is a low building, consisting of a nave and north aisle, north transept, chancel, and low tower at the west end. The interior is neat, the aisle being divided from the nave by five pointed arches, resting on octagonal columns. At the west end is the gallery, and beneath it a circular font. — The living (St. Michael), a disch^d vicarage in the diocese of York, is valued at £9. 7s. 8½d.: pres. net income, £220: patron, Archbishop of York: pres. incumbent, J. Matthew, 1837: contains 5,740 acres: 125 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 728: ass^d prop^r £4,513: poor rates in 1848, £195. 2s.

WEXHAM, BUCKINGHAM, a parish in the hun^d of Stoke, union of Eton: 20 miles from London (coach road 21), 4 from Colnbrook, 2 from Slough. — Gt. West. Rail. to Slough, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through London to Slough, &c., 152 miles. — Money orders issued at Colnbrook: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — Ragstone abounds in the neighbourhood. The learned Bishop Fleetwood was, before his elevation to the bench, during the years 1705 and 1708, rector of this parish, and it was here that he wrote his Chronicon Pretorum. The parochial charities produce about £1. 5s. per annum. — The living (St. Mary), a rectory in the archd^y of Bucks, and diocese of Oxford, is valued at £5. 15s.: pres. net income, £209: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, A. A. Kempe, 1846: contains 670 acres: 37 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 175: ass^d prop^r £1,145: poor rates in 1848, £134. 14s. Tithes commuted in 1810.

WEYBOURNE, NORFOLK, a parish in the hun^d of Holt, union of Erpingham, near the coast of the North Sea: 154 miles from London (coach road 123), 4 from Holt, 7 from Cromer. — East. Co^r Rail. through Dereham to Falkenham, thence 15 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, Dereham, &c., 184 miles. — Money orders issued at Holt: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 2½ p.m. — The village is very picturesquely situated on the coast, in a deep romantic bay, and is sheltered by lofty ranges of hills, which bound it from the inland country, and extend along each side of the shore. The water is so deep in this bay, that ships can anchor within a hand's throw of the land. The church is in the English decorated style, and near it are the remains of a priory of Augustine canons, founded in the reign of Henry II. — The living (All Saints) is a donative in the archd^y and diocese of Norwich: pres. net income, £50: patron, Earl of Orford: pres. incumbent,

B. Pulleyne, 1845: contains 1,600 acres: 48 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 311: do. in 1851, 320: ass^d prop^r £979: poor rates in 1848, £154. 16s.

WEYBREAD, SUFFOLK, a parish in the hun^d and union of Hoxne, on the southern side of the river Waveney: 103 miles from London (coach road 98), 3 from Harleston, 8 from Eye. — East. Co^r Rail. to Diss, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, and Norwich, to Diss, &c., 194 miles. — Money orders issued at Harleston: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. — The living (St. Andrew), a disch^d vicarage in the archd^y of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £4. 15s.: pres. net income, £102: patron, Rev. T. K. Thomas: pres. incumbent, T. K. Thomas, 1845: contains 1,730 acres: 95 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 771: do. in 1851, 790: ass^d prop^r £3,268: poor rates in 1848, £339. 2s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

WEYBRIDGE, SURREY, a parish in the first division of the hun^d of Elmbridge, union of Chertsey: 19 miles from London (coach road 21), 12 from Guildford, 6 from Esher. — Sou. West. Rail. to Weybridge station: from Derby, through London, &c., 151 miles. — Money orders issued at Esher: London letters deliv^d 9½ a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. — The church contains several interesting monuments, and amongst the rest one by Sir Francis Chantrey, to the memory of the late Duchess of York, whose lord's residence, Oatlands, lies within the boundaries of the parish; and on the green, a column of about 30 feet high has been erected to the memory of her royal highness. It bears an inscription commemorative of the gratitude of the inhabitants for the many acts of kindly goodness which she had done whilst resident among them. The church is a small but neat edifice, with a nave and south aisle. The Baptists and Roman Catholics have chapels in the town. One of the schools here is endowed with £5 a year by Mr. Charles Hopton, who also left £100 for the erection of a school-house. The other charities produce about £22 a year. — The living (St. Nicholas), a rectory in the archd^y of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £7. 0s. 5d.: pres. net income, £320: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, W. Giffard, 1846: contains 1,240 acres: 128 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,064: do. in 1851, 1,114: ass^d prop^r £4,162: poor rates in 1848, £600. 3s. — Oatlands, the seat of his late Royal Highness the Duke of York, and afterwards of Lord Francis Egerton, now Earl of Ellesmere, is a most beautiful domain, situated on the summit of an eminence near the banks of the river Thames. Not far from the mansion there are several Celtic barrows, which have led to the supposition that this was at one time the scene of a sanguinary engagement between the aborigines and the Romans, near a place called Cowey-Stakes. The old and ruinous mansion of Ham stands in a small park, between the confluence of the river Wey and the Thames. Near it there are several enormous cedar and fir trees, one of the former being esteemed the largest of its size in England; it is 13 feet in circumference at five feet from the ground, and runs up in a straight line to a great height.

WEYBRIDGE, NORFOLK, a hamlet in the parish of Acle—(which see for access, &c.): 1 mile from Acle. —Bishop Tanner, in his Notitia Monastica, says—Here was a small priory of Austin canons, founded by some of the family of Bigod, in the reign of Edward I. It was dedicated to St. Mary, rated, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £7. 13s. 4d. per annum, and granted, in the 30th year of the same reign, to Richard Fulmerston.

WEYHILL WITH PENTON-GRAFTON, HANTS, a parish in the hund^d. and union of Andover, Andover division of the county: Weyhill contains Clanville and Nutbin: 72 miles from London (coach road 67), 3 from Andover, 5 from Ludgershall. —Sou. West. Rail. to Andover Road station, thence 14 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Andover Road, &c., 160 miles. —Money orders issued at Andover: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. —The village, which is situated on the border of Salisbury Plain, is only in itself an insignificant place, but has acquired great renown from being the scene of probably the greatest cattle fair in the kingdom. During the five days of its continuance, it is attended by great numbers of people from all parts of the country. Not less than 80,000 sheep, and sometime as many as 140,000 are sold during the first day. —The living (St. Michael), a rectory in the archd^y. and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £26: pres. net income, £476: patron, Queen's College, Oxford: pres. incumbent, W. Kilner, 1812: contains 1,920 acres: 85 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 375: poor rates in 1848, £294.

WEYMOUTH WITH MELCOMBE-REGIS, DORSET, a borough, seaport, and market town, in the union of Weymouth, and Dorchester division of the county, in a small bay in the English Channel, at the mouth of the river Wey: 149 miles from London (coach road 128), 8 from Dorchester, 8 from Abbotsbury. —Sou. West. Rail. through Southampton to Dorchester, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Dorchester, &c., 238 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 6.35 p.m. —This place and Melcombe-Regis form, in fact, only one town, Weymouth being on the south-west of the river Wey, and Melcombe-Regis on the north-west of that stream, over which there is an admirably constructed stone bridge, provided with the means of being raised in the middle, so as to allow the passing and repassing of the sea-going vessels by which the port is frequented. The streets of Melcombe-Regis are chiefly arranged along the margin of the sea, near which there are many fine edifices, forming one of the finest esplanades in the county, extending to nearly a mile in length. These are a part of the refinements which have been induced by the change of character which Weymouth has assumed, from its natural state of a fishing town to that of a fashionable watering-place, frequented by the haut ton, and patronised by royalty. The old town, however, still retains many of its former features, though it has been much modernised, the back streets being many of them narrow, and consequently dirty. Melcombe is, of course, that portion which is most frequented by visitors; and it was here that the Royal Lodge was erected as a residence for George III. and the other members of the royal family, with many of whom it was a favourite place of resort. Indeed the spot on which the esplanade was formed, was, when the royal visit was first contemplated, occupied by a mass of rubbish, and most of the ground on which Melcombe stands was reclaimed from the inner channel, or estuary, that scours the harbour. The place where the water flowed is now covered with houses, and the process of reclamation is still going on. Notwithstanding, however, the back water to the harbour, the quay has become inaccessible, by the accumulation of sand, to any vessels but those of small tonnage. The harbour is a tidal one, and, except under certain circumstances, sea-going vessels are left dry on the beach at low water. Weymouth is a parochial chapelry to the parish of Wyke-Regis; and at Melcombe-Regis there was no church till 1605, the church of Radipole, in which parish it was situated, being the parochial church. In 1650, the inhabitants of Weymouth having had their chapel destroyed in the civil war, petitioned that they might have a parochial church, and that a provision should be made for a minister, as Weymouth being a garrison and port-town, they did not consider it safe for the people to go so far as to the church at Wyke, to which, for many purposes, it was necessary to resort even while the chapel existed. Their request was not complied with; and, until the year 1834, there was neither church nor chapel of the establishment in Weymouth; and to all intents and purposes the church of Melcombe became the parochial church of the whole town; though it was not till 1817, when it was rebuilt under act 55th Geo. III., that it was formally appropriated to the use of the town inhabitants of both sides of the river. In 1834, however, a new church was founded on the Weymouth side in place of the old one. The living of Weymouth is a perpetual curacy, annexed to the rectory of Wyke-Regis, formerly in the archd^y. of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, now in the diocese of Salisbury. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount, £17. 15s. 2d. The living of Melcombe is a rectory, to which is annexed the perpetual curacy of Radipole, formerly in the archd^y. of Dorset, and diocese of Bristol, now in the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol; rated at £11. 5s. 5d.; gross income, £305: patron, in 1841, W. Windham, Esq. The church had fallen into a state of extreme disrepair, when rebuilt in 1817. The interior is handsome, and contains a fine altar-piece, representing the Last Supper, by Sir James Thornhill, a native of the town, to which he presented the painting. There was anciently a priory of Black canons near the centre of the town: it was founded by the family of the Rogers of Bryanston, and was dedicated to St. Winifred. The buildings formed an extensive quadrangle, but have long since disappeared; and their site is occupied by several small houses, in digging the foundations of which an immense quantity of human bones were discovered. There are in the town an Independent church, formed about the year 1687; a Baptist, formed in 1813; a Wesleyan Methodist, in 1805; a Friends' meeting-house; and a Roman Catholic chapel. In the chapelry of Weymouth, in 1833, there were seven infant and two daily schools, with 146 scholars; in one of the latter, six boys were paid for by the corporation, as trustees of Mr. Taylor's charity. In the parish of Melcombe-Regis, in the same year, there were thirteen daily and two day and Sunday National schools: the former contained, in all, 260 males and 220 females, and the latter 206 males and 229 females: in all, 927 scholars. The charity of Sir Samuel Mico, for apprenticesments, yielded, in 1836, £78. 13s. per annum, dispensed in premiums of £7 each for poor boys of the borough of Weymouth and Melcombe-Regis. Other charities of Sir Samuel Mico to the borough, £75 per annum, chiefly expended on ten decayed seamen. Charities of Lady Brown and others to the borough about £30 per annum, including £7. 17s. 6d., the amount of Taylor's educational charity. Charities of Melcombe-Regis, £6. 3s. 6d., besides six bushels of coals per annum. Charities of Weymouth chapelry, £4. 10s. 10d. per annum. The other charities are numerous, but all of a voluntary character. About half a mile to the south-west of the town stands Sandsfoot, or Weymouth Castle. Mr. Grose, in speaking of it in his Antiquities, says—"From the ruinous state in which this building now appears, one would be apt to imagine it of much greater antiquity than it really is, it being of no older date than about the year 1539, when it was erected by Henry VIII., at the time when he was fortifying the coast against the invasions of those enemies he expected the pope would raise against him, on account of the changes he had made, and was making, in the religion of this kingdom. Leland, in his Itinerary, called it the New Castle. In the last civil war, Weymouth was several times taken by both parties, when, although no particular mention is made of the castle, doubtless it had its share in these transactions; particularly as, in 1641, the parliamentarians converted a chapel, formerly standing here, into a fort, from which they battered Melcombe-Regis. It is, therefore, not likely they would omit making use of this castle, which must then really have been far from a contemptible post, and was, when entire, extremely defensible against troops much better provided and disciplined than those which composed either army. This, perhaps, may account for its present shattered condition. It stands on the edge of a cliff, opposite another castle built about the same time, on the peninsula of Portland, from which it is separated by a bay nearly three miles broad, called the Road of Portland. The body of the castle is a right-angled parallelogram, its greatest length running from north to south. At its north end was a tower on which were the arms of England, supported by a wivern and an unicorn. The north part seems to have been the governor's apartment, and is all vaulted. Near its south end there is a lower building, said to have been the gun-room; this being broader than the other part of the edifice, forms flanks, which defend its east and west sides, and on the south front is semicircular; before, there was formerly a platform for cannon. On the east and west sides there are embrasures for guns, and below them two tier of loop-holes for small arms, the lowest almost level with the ground. The north front is nearly destroyed, but the remains of an arch or gateway show that the entrance was on that side. The whole edifice seems to have been cased with squared stones, the walls were thick and lofty, and the buildings, though small, were not inelegant. Since the Restoration, it has been neglected and suffered to fall to ruin. The north-east and south sides were, at a small distance, surrounded by a deep ditch and earthen rampart, through which, on the east front, was a gate faced with stone, part of which is still remaining. Mr. Hutchins calls it Sandsfoot or Sandsfort Castle." Weymouth, adapted as it has been for the recreation of the middle and higher classes of society, is amply provided with a theatre, libraries, reading and news-rooms, and all the other appliances for pleasing and refined intercourse. Weymouth and Melcombe-Regis were formerly distinct boroughs, but became united by an act passed in the 13th year of Queen Elizabeth's reign; the institution of the harbour-master and other officers being appointed under distinct acts of parliament. Under the Municipal Reform Act, the borough comprehends the boundaries of the chapelry of Weymouth, and those of the old borough of Melcombe, with the ground lying, to a certain extent, to the north and south of both places. The town has obtained a commission of the peace, and now returns two members to parliament. The Weymouth poor-law union comprises 18 parishes, with a population of about 17,000 persons, spread over an area of 52 square miles. — The living is a curacy, annexed to Wyke-Regis: contains 1,510 acres: 507 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £2,927: poor rates in 1848, £694. — Bankers: R. & H. Williams—draw on Williams, Deacon, & Co.: Eliot & Pearce—draw on Williams, Deacon, & Co.

WHADDON, BUCKINGHAM, a parish, formerly a market town, in the second division of the three hun^d of Cottesloe, union of Winslow: it contains the hamlet of Nash: 48 miles from London (coach road 50), 6 from Fenny-Stratford, 5 from Aylesbury. — Nor. West. Rail. through Cheddington to Aylesbury, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Cheddington, &c., 108 miles. — Money orders issued at Stony-Stratford: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. — A monastery of Benedictine monks, dedicated to St. Leonard, existed here prior to the time of Henry III.; its revenues, at the general dissolution of monasteries in the reign of Henry VIII., were estimated at £24 per annum. One of the schools here has an endowment for the education of twenty boys, founded by T. Coare, Esq., W. S. Lowndes, Esq., and the Vicar. There is also an almshouse founded by Mr. Coare. Mr. Browne Willis, and the celebrated Edmund Spenser the poet, often made the manor-house their residence, and here Queen Elizabeth was splendidly entertained by Lord Grey during her progress through Buckinghamshire. Whaddon was the birth-place of Dr. Richard Cox, bishop of Ely, one of the staunchest champions of the Reformation, and one of the most influential framers of the Church Liturgy. — The living (St. Mary), a vicarage in the archd^y of Bucks, and diocese of Oxford, is valued at £10: pres. net income, £152: patron, New College, Oxford: pres. incumbent, W. J. Meech, 1836: contains 3,730 acres: 189 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 910: do. in 1851, 940: ass^d. prop^r. £4,022. — The Hall is now the seat of William Selby Lowndes, Esq., the representative of an ancient family, originally settled at Leigh

Hall, in the county of Chester, but a branch of which became seated at Wiuslow, in Buckinghamshire, early in the 16th century. Towards the end of the 17th century, one of them, William Lowndes, Esq., was secretary of the Treasury. That gentleman, who was for many years a member of the House of Commons, and chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, originated the funding system; and, in consideration of his eminent services, Queen Anne conferred upon him the office of auditor of land revenue for his life, with a reversion to his sons. The grandson of that gentleman, Richard Lowndes, Esq., sat in parliament for the county of Bucks in 1742, during which year he was also high sheriff. Of that gentleman, the present Mr. Lowndes is a direct descendant.

WHALEY, CHESTER, a joint township with Yeardsley, in the parish of Taxall—(which see for access, &c.)—hun^d and union of Macclesfield, in the line of the Peak-Forest Canal: 171 miles from London, 1 from Taxall, 10 from Stockport.—Contains 1,420 acres: 73 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 663: ass^d. prop^r. £1,606: poor rates in 1848, £77. 10s.

WHALEY, LANCASTER, a very extensive parish, containing the borough and market town of Clitheroe; the market towns of Burnley and Colne; the chapelries of Old Accrington, Altham, Bacup, Chatburn, Christchurch, Cliviger, Downham, Fence-in-Pendle, Goodshaw, Habergham, Holme, Marsden, Newchurch-in-Pendle, Newchurch-in-Rossendale, Padiham, Rawtestall, and Worsthorn; and the townships of New Accrington, Barley with Whitby-Booths, Higher Booths, Lower Booths, Brierscliffe with Extwistle, Chatburn, Dunnockshaw, Foulbridge, Habergham-Eaves, Hallows-Reedly with Lilly-Close and New-Laund-Booth, Hapton, Heyhouses, Higham-Booth, Huncoat, Ightinbill-park, Mearley, Little Milton, Read, Rough-Lee-Booth, Simonstone, Trawden-Forest, Twiston, Whalley, Wheatley-Carr, Wiswell, Worsthorn with Hurstwood, Worston, and Yate with Pickup-Bank, all in the higher division of the hun^d of Blackburn; the market town of Haslingden, the chapelry of Churchtown, and the townships of Bowland with Leagram, Clayton-le-Moors, and Oswaldtwistle, in the lower division of the hun^d of Blackburn, union of Clitheroe, co-palatine of Lancaster; and the township of Willington, in the second division of the hun^d of Eddisbury, co-palatine of Chester: it is said also to comprise the chapelry of Whitewell, in the western division of the wapentake of Staincliffe and Ewcross, west riding of the county of York: altogether, this immense parish contains about fifty market towns, chapelries, and townships, and is about 30 miles in length and 15 in breadth: it is by no means so considerable in size, however, as it formerly was, having anciently included what are now the parishes of Blackburn, Chipping, Mitton, Ribchester, Rochdale, and Slaidburn: the rivers Ribble and Calder unite their waters near the western extremity of the parish, and it is intersected by the Liverpool and Leeds Canal: 215 miles from London (coach road 219), 4 from Clitheroe, 7 from Blackburn.—Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe and Manchester to Whalley station: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 115 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 4.25 p.m.—Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—Henry Lucy, earl of Lincoln, having given the advowson of the parish church of Whalley to the White monks of Stanlawe in Cheshire, they procured the same to be appropriated to them, whereupon, in the year 1296, they removed their abbey hither, and increased the number of their religious to sixty. There was another removal proposed to a place called Tostatha, by Thomas, earl of Lancaster, in the year 1316, but it seems not to have taken effect. Whalley was dedicated to the Blessed Virgin Mary, and, at the suppression, had revenues to the yearly value of £321. 9s. 1d. according to Dugdale, and £551. 4s. 6d. according to Speed. It was granted to Richard Ashton and John Braddyll, in the 7th year of King Edward VI. The ruins of this abbey still form a fine object of interest, showing the elaborate workmanship of the later decorated style of English architecture. The free grammar-school of the township was founded by Queen Elizabeth. It is endowed with about £17 per annum. The church is a large and most interesting structure in the early English style of architecture, the chancel being a particularly fine specimen of that order. In the interior there are eighteen stalls of antique but beautiful handicraft, and some remarkably fine screen-work which formerly adorned the abbey. The township, together with the schools of Middleton and Barnley, enjoys an interest in thirteen scholarships, founded in 1572, by Dr. Nowell of Brazenose College, Oxford. The district of Whalley is altogether one of a manufacturing character, upwards of 12,000 hands being employed in the factories.---The living, a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Chester, is valued at £6. 3s. 9d., returned at £115: gross income, £140: patron, Archbishop of Canterbury: contains 108,140 acres: 14,710 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £141,256: poor rates in 1848, £335. 2s.

WHELNETHAM (LITTLE). See WELNETHAM (LITTLE).

WHELPINGTON-KIRK, NORTHUMBRIA, a parish in the north-eastern division of Tindale ward, union of Bellingham, at the source of the small river Wansbeck: it includes the townships of Great Barrington, Capheaton, Catcherside, Coldwell, Crogdean, Fawns, Little Harle, West Harle, Kirk-Whelpington, and West Whelpington: 315 miles from London (coach road 292), 22 from Newcastle-on-Tyne, 15 from Morpeth. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, and York, to Newcastle-on-Tyne, thence 22 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 183 miles. Money orders issued at Newcastle-on-Tyne. The church is very ancient, and constitutes part of a much larger structure which originally existed on its site. The parish is large, consisting chiefly of moorlands, which are mostly laid out in sheep and dairy farms. It is a wild and romantic district, and peat, which is found in several of its portions, is generally used for fuel. The climate is so salubrious, that it is said that every one out of three of its inhabitants lives to the age of seventy years, and upwards of one-half see more than their fiftieth year. There is a sulphureous spring within the boundaries, which has long been celebrated for its efficacy in chronic complaints. Limestone and sandstone are abundantly found in the parish. There are numerous remains of lines and other warlike works, which, it is believed, were constructed during the border wars. The living (St. Bartholomew), a vicarage in the archd^y of Northumberland, and diocese of Durham, is valued at £7. 3s. 4d.: pres. net income, £288: patron, Bishop of Durham: pres. incumbent, J. Walker: contains 12,420 acres: 148 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 705: do. in 1851, 750: ass^d. prop^y. £9,184: poor rates in 1848, £156. 6s. Whelpington Tower, which was formerly fortified, is now used as the residence of the rector.

WHELPINGTON (WEST), NORTHUMBERLAND, a township in the parish of Kirk-Whelpington, north-eastern division of Tindale ward, union of Bellingham, on the river Wansbeck, near its source: 292 miles from London, 15 from Hexham, 14 from Rothbury. (For access, see above.) Contains 11 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 56: poor rates in 1848, £35. 7s.

WHENBY, NORTH RIDING, YORK, a parish in the wapentake of Bulmer, union of Easingwold: 233 miles from London (coach road 212), 8 from Easingwold, 13 from York. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, and York, to Easingwold, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 101 miles. Money orders issued at Easingwold: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 2 p.m. The living (St. Martin), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y of Cleveland, and diocese of York, is valued at £4. 8s. 4d.: pres. net income, £121: patron, W. Garforth, Esq.: pres. incumbent, Wm. Preston, 1806: contains 1,390 acres: 24 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 124: do. in 1851, 140: ass^d. prop^y. £1,665. The tithes were commuted in 1839.

WHEPSTEAD, SUFFOLK, a parish in the hun^d. and union of Thingoe: 99 miles from London (coach road 66), 5 from Bury St. Edmund's, 12 from Sudbury. East. Co^t. Rail. to Bury St. Edmund's, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 231 miles. Money orders issued at Bury St. Edmund's: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. The church is a neat structure, with a tower. In 1721, Mr. Thomas Sparke left twenty-four acres of land to the parish, on the rental of which ten poor children are educated. The parish also participates in a benefaction of £8 a year, arising from the bequests of Sir Robert Drury, Sir Robert Jarvis, and Mr. J. W. Allen. The living, a rectory in the diocese of Ely, is valued at £14. 4s. 2d.: pres. net income, £468: pres. incumbent, Thomas Image, 1798: contains 3,450 acres: 117 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 681: ass^d. prop^y. £3,421: poor rates in 1848, £374. Plumptre House, a very pleasing domain, is the seat of Sir Thomas Hammond, Bart.

WHERSTEAD, SUFFOLK, a parish in the hun^d. and incorporation of Sampford: the river Orwell flows along the north-eastern boundary of the parish: 71 miles from London (coach road 68), 3 from Ipswich, 10 from Hadleigh. East. Co^t. Rail. to Ipswich, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 203 miles. Money orders issued at Ipswich: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. The church is a pleasing edifice, with a tower, containing three bells. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—In an old deed without date, to which Gerard, prior of Ipswich, is one of the witnesses, is mention of the monastery of Whervestide, perhaps some small foundation of short continuance, united to the priory of St. Peter and St. Paul in Ipswich, to whom belonged the church and manor, and several lands in this village. The living (St. Mary) is a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich: pres. net income, £153: patron, the Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, F. B. Tincke, 1847: contains 2,370 acres: 47 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 238: ass^d. prop^y. £2,758: poor rates in 1848, £171. 2s. Tithes commuted in 1839. Wherstead Lodge, a fine structure of white brick, is the seat of the Marquis of Conyngham, Earl of Mount-Charles, Viscount Slane, Conyngham, and Mount-Charles, Baron Conyngham in the peerage of Ireland, Baron Minster of Minster, in the county of Kent, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, K.P., G.P.H., and a privy councillor, who succeeded to the title and estates as second marquis in 1832, on the death of his father. The family of which his lordship is the head is of Scottish origin, and of very ancient descent in that part of the country; but the first of whom we have any historical biographic notice is William Conyngham, who was bishop of Carlisle in 1539. The grandson of that learned personage, William Conyngham of Conyngham-Head, was created a baronet of Nova Scotia. The grandson of that gentleman, Sir Albert Conyngham, was, in 1660, appointed lieutenant-general of the ordnance in Ireland, and having fought on the side of William III. in the battle of the Boyne, afterwards fell in a skirmish with the Rapparees, near Coloneoy, in Sligo county. The son of that gentleman, a distinguished military officer, married Mary, daughter of Sir John Williams, Bart. of Minster-Court, and widow of Lord Shelburne, through whom he acquired considerable property. His grandson, the Right Hon. Henry Conyngham, having sat for a considerable time in parliament, was elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Conyngham of Mount-Charles, in the county of Donegal, in the year 1753. In 1756, his lordship was created Viscount Conyngham, and, in 1780, Earl and Baron Conyngham, the barony to descend, in the case of a failure of male issue, to his nephew, Francis Pierpont Burton, M.P. for the county of Clare, who succeeded to that title, all the other honours becoming extinct, but were revived in the person of his son Henry, the third baron, who was, in 1816, created Marquis of Conyngham, and was made a peer of the United Kingdom. His lordship was a general officer in the army, a knight of the order of St. Patrick, and one of the representative peers of Ireland.

WHERWELL with WESTOVER, HANTS, a parish in the hun^d of Wherwell, union of Andover, Andover division of the county, intersected by the rivers Ande and Test, the former of which flows into the Redbridge and Andover Canal: 62 miles from London (coach road 63), 4 from Andover, 10 from Winchester. — Sou. West. Rail. to Andover Road station, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Andover Road, &c., 150 miles. — Money orders issued at Andover: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. — Some trifling charities belong to the parish. Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—Here was a Benedictine nunnery of the foundation of Elfrida, queen dowager of King Edgar, about the year 986, to expiate for her being concerned in the murder of her first husband, Eithelwolfe, that she might be queen, and also of her son-in-law, King Edward, that her own son, Eithelred, might be king. Herein she spent the latter part of her life very penitently, as it is said, and was here buried. This abbey was dedicated to the Holy Cross and St. Peter, and endowed at the suppression with £339. 8s. 7d. per annum, as Dugdale, and £403. 12s. 10d. as Speed. These barbarous events, with the subsequent piety of Queen Elfrida, are commemorated in the following inscription on a stone cross within the parish: —“About the year of our Lord mccccxiii., upon this spot, beyond the time of memory, called Dead Man's Plack, tradition reports that Edgar—surnamed the Peaceable—king of England, in the ardour of youth, love, and indignation, slew with his own hand his treacherous and ungrateful favourite, Earl Athelwold, owner of this forest of Harewood, in resentment of the earl's having basely betrayed the royal confidence, and perfidiously married his intended bride, the beauteous Elfrida, daughter of Ordgar, Earl of Devonshire, who afterwards became the wife of Edgar, and by him mother of King Ethelred II. Queen Elfrida, after Edgar's death, murdered his eldest son, King Edward the Martyr, to make way for her own, and founded the nunnery of Wherwell.” — The living (Holy Cross), a vicarage, with the curacies of Bullington and Tufton, in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £14: pres. net income, £301: patron, Colonel Iremonger: pres. incumbent, T. L. Iremonger: contains 4,640 acres: 122 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 664: ass^d. prop^y. £3,479. Tithes commuted in 1841. — Fair, September 24, for sheep and bullocks.

WHETSTONE, DERBY, a hamlet in the parish of Tideswell—(which see for access, &c.)—hun^d of High-Peak, union of Bakewell: 162 miles from London, 2 from Tideswell, 6 from Buxton. — Money orders issued at Tideswell: London letters deliv^d. 10½ a.m.: post closes 3 p.m. — Mr. Rhodes, with his usual elegance of diction, in his Peak Scenery—a work which, for its beautiful depiction of nature, cannot be too much admired—says, “Wheston, though consisting of a few houses only, is a very picturesque little place. The trees, which are mingled with the cottages, are so abundant, and everywhere so finely foliaged, that the place appears more like a copse, or wood, than a village. Lime, elm, oak, and sycamore, of the most luxuriant growth, line each side of the road, and surround every dwelling. In one part of the village, near the road-side, stands an old stone cross, which, like everything else that the place contains, is closely embosomed in trees. The upper part of the cross, which is evidently of an ancient date and of a singular construction, resembles, in some of its ornaments, the foliated ramifications of a Gothic window—the shaft is unadorned and more modern. One side of this curious relic of former times represents the infant Saviour in the arms of his mother; over their heads there is a faint indication of a star, emblematic of the ray that directed the wise men of the east to the birth-place of Jesus. The other side of this venerable cross exhibits the crucifixion of Christ, whose birth and death it has apparently been the design of the sculptor to commemorate in the erection of this symbol of his faith. Several of these ancient structures have been found in this part of Derbyshire, but only a few have escaped the dilapidating progress of time; others have been destroyed, as objects of no value.” — Contains 12 houses: popⁿ in 1851, 65: ass^d. prop^y. £749: poor rates in 1848, £38. 19s.

WHICKHAM, DURHAM, a parish in the western division of Chester ward, union of Gateshead, east of the river Derwent, and south of the Tyne: it contains the townships of Fellside, Lowside, Swallow, and Whickham: 297 miles from London (coach road 274), 4 from Gateshead, 14 from Durham.---Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, and York, to Gateshead, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 175 miles.---Money orders issued at Durham: London letters deliv^d. 11 a.m.: post closes 8.10 p.m.---The village is peculiarly situated, many of the houses standing on the edge of a steep descent, and commanding a beautiful prospect of the valley of the Tyne, from Newburn to Newcastle. Near to it there is a curious stratum of burnt earth and limestone, which, according to tradition, was caused by the English army setting fire to their tents, just before their hasty retreat, when the Scottish army crossed the Newburn in 1640. It would appear that the burning camp communicated with a seam of coal, which thus became ignited, and which is said to have burnt very violently for many years; the calcined stones are now made useful in forming ornamental pavements in the walks of gentlemen's gardens. A school was founded here in 1711, by Dr. Robert Tomlinson, who was for some time rector of this parish. It derives its income partly from bequests left by him and others, and partly from the rentals of certain pews and galleries in the church which he erected. The endowment now yields about £14 a year; the other parochial charities produce about £67 a year.---The living (St. Mary), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Durham, is valued at £20. 8s. 11½d.: pres. net income, £663: patron, Bishop of Durham: pres. incumbent, H. B. Carr, 1846: contains 5,730 acres: 676 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,319: do. in 1851, 4,500: ass^d. prop^r. £12,109: poor rates in 1848, £1,044. 10s.

WHINFELL-FOREST, WESTMORELAND, a hamlet in the parish of Brougham—(which see for access, &c.): 8 miles from Appleby.

WHIPPINGHAM, HAMPSHIRE, a parish in the liberty of East Medina, Isle of Wight incorporation and division of the county: the parish is bounded on the west by the river Medina, which is here navigable, and on the north-east by the Motherbank: the hamlet of East Cowes, separated from West Cowes by the river Medina, is within the parish, also the smaller hamlets of Burton, Coombly, and Fairtree: 86 miles from London, 2 from Cowes, 4 from Newport. (For access, &c., see NEWPORT.) Money orders issued at Cowes: London letters deliv^d. 9½ a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m. The church is a large edifice, with a tower and spire, principally in the later style of English architecture. Some small endowments have been left for educational purposes; the other charities produce about £20 a year. Within the limits of the parish, the late Lord Henry Seymour built a magnificent residence in the baronial style, from the design and under the direction of Sir Jeffrey Wyattville, which is allowed to be a masterpiece of taste and science. Sir Henry Englefield, in speaking of this splendid structure, says—"Seated on the deep descent of the coast of the Solent sea, it perhaps commands a view of that strait, superior in beauty to any other point in the island. To the east, Portsmouth, crowded with shipping, is in full view; and the richest line of the woody coast of the island, from Barton to Nettleston, appears in long and varied perspective. To the north, the Southampton river is seen in its whole extent, and the town of Southampton, with its spires and towers, though distant, is no inconsiderable object. The woods of the New Forest clothe the view to the west; while Calshot Castle, at the point of its long bank of shingle, stands boldly out amidst the waves, and marks the separation between the Solent sea and Southampton river. The house is of a very noble general form, and its clustering towers in every point of view, particularly when seen from the sea, are a striking and commanding object, and a most splendid addition to the general scenery of the coast. The choice of both the former and the site of the mansion, reflects the highest honour on the taste of the noble owner." Rich in all the aspects of rural scenery, it is not surprising that the country around is embellished with numerous villas and their attached pleasure-grounds. Chief among these is the castellated mansion of Lord Shannon, which was originally built under the supervision of Mr. Nash, the favourite architect of King George IV. Embosomed in fine forest trees, its picturesque turret rises far above their foliage, and forms a most pleasing object in the landscape on all sides. His lordship's principal seat is Castle Martyr, in the county of Cork. There was formerly here an oratory of Augustine monks, founded by John de Insula, in the year 1282, some remains of which are still in existence, and are now used as a farm-house. The living (St. Mildred), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £19. 1s. 5d.: pres. net income, £757: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, F. P. WHISTONS (or WYTESTANES), WORCESTER, a tithing in the parish of Claines, lower division of the hund^d. of Oswaldsloew, union of Worcester: 112 miles from London, 1 from Worcester, 8 from Droitwich. — Money orders issued at Worcester: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. — For access, see WORCESTER, of which this tithing now forms one of the most extensive and respectable suburbs, being occupied by streets of admirable appearance. Previous to the Reform Act, this portion of the city was excluded from the franchise. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—There was here a priory of seven or eight White nuns, in the north part of the city of Worcester, said to be founded by a bishop of Worcester. The site of their house, and the donations which had been made to them, were confirmed by the prior and conv. nt of Worcester in the year 1255. It was dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, and valued, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £53. 3s. 7d. per annum, as Dugdale, and £56. 3s. 7d. as Speed; and granted, in the 35th year of the same reign, to one Richard Callowhill. In the north suburb of this city (Worcester) was an hospital, which was dedicated to St. Oswald, and, as one asserts, founded by Bishop Oswald himself. It was certainly in being before the year 1268, for a master and — brethren, whose income was valued, in the 26th year of Henry VIII., at £14. 14s. 4d. per annum in the whole, and £13. 14s. 4d. clear; and upon a new valuation, in the 4th year of the succeeding reign, at £15. 18s. It was granted, 33d Henry VIII., to the dean and chapter of Worcester, and was demolished in the reign of Queen Elizabeth; but after the Restoration, Bishop Fell rebuilt it in a sumptuous manner, and recovered many of its possessions, and it still maintains twelve poor men. — Contains 497 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,849: ass^d. prop^r. £3,807: poor rates in 1848, £793. 1s.

WHITACRE (NETHER), WARWICK, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hund^d. of Hemlingford, union of Meriden: it is situated on both sides

Bradley, 1826: contains 2,210 acres: 88 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 503: ass^d prop^y £2,540: poor rates in 1848, £182. 12s.

WHITACRE (OVER), WARWICK, a parish in the Atherstone division of the hun^d. of Hemlingford, union of Meriden: 100 miles from London, 4 from Colehill, 9 from Coventry. —(For access and postal arrangements, see above.) —The church is a small structure in the Italian style, standing on an eminence which commands beautiful views of the surrounding country. —The living (St. Leonard), a donative in the diocese of Worcester, is valued at £10: pres. net income, £142: patron, Earl Digby: pres. incumbent, R. Grenside, 1846: popⁿ in 1841, 330.

WHITBECK (or WHITEBECK), CUMBERLAND, a parish in Allerdale ward above Derwent, union of Booth, near the foot of Blackcombe hill: 260 miles from London (coach road 286), 9 from Ravenglass, 4 from Millom. —Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe to Lancaster, thence across Morecambe Sands and Ulverstone, 30 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 160 miles. —Money orders issued at Broughton. —There is an hospital here, endowed for six poor people in 1632 by the parishioners, and endowed by Mr. Henry Parke, a native of Whitbeck, with £24 per annum. The parish lies between Blackcombe hill and the sea. In the former there is an enormous cavity, several hundred yards in width and breadth, at the bottom of which there is a spring of singularly pure water. The interior of the cavity is covered with a semi-vitrified substance, which has all the appearance of old lava. Near to this height, upon the shore, there is a mineral spring, the waters of which are considered to be very efficacious in cutaneous disorders. Near the Blackcombe also there is a fine cascade, and in the peat-earth, and morass which runs through the parish, trunks of fir and oak trees, of large dimensions, have several times been found, and nuts and acorns also have been dug up from a very great depth. Many geological changes have taken place in this neighbourhood, and there are numerous indications of hedge-rows and road-ways far beyond the line of low water-mark. In addition to these sources of interest, there are several Druidical remains—one consisting of upright pieces of stone in a circular position, all massive in their proportions, and eight in number. Another, called Kirkstones, consists of thirty blocks, arranged in two circles, resembling the celebrated monument of Stonehenge on Salisbury Plain. A third consists of twelve stones, and near to these also there is a large cairn surrounded almost by stones, similar to those which we have already enumerated. —The living (St. Mary), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, is valued at £9. 14s. 8d.: pres. net income, £76: patron, Earl of Lonsdale: pres. incumbent, T. Ormaudy, 1850: contains 3,910 acres: 37 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 208: ass^d prop^y £1,848: poor rates in 1848, £98. 17s.

The Wesleyan Methodists have two chapels in the village. One of the schools here is endowed with £10 per annum; the other charities produce a variable income, averaging £24 per annum. Whitburn is celebrated both as a fishing and a sea-bathing place, and there are now all the accommodations in the way of bathing-machines, libraries, news-rooms, lodging-houses, required for a summer sojourn. Several Roman remains, such as coins and other relics, have been discovered in the parish, in which there are great mineral deposits of limestone and coal, though the latter is discovered at a great depth. The coins range from the time of Constantine to that of Maximilian. —The living, a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Durham, is valued at £39. 19s. 4d.: pres. net income, £1,113: patron, Bishop of Durham: pres. incumbent, Thomas Baker, 1810: contains 4,350 acres: 183 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,061: ass^d prop^y £7,225: poor rates in 1848, £340. 18s.

port, and market town, in the liberty of Whitby-Strand, union of Whitby, on the coast of the North Sea, at the mouth of the river Eske: besides the town of Whitby, the parish comprises the chapelry of Eskdaleside, part of the township of Aislaby, and the townships of Hawsker-with-Stainsacre, Newholme-with-Dunsley, Ruswarp, and Ugglebarnby: 266 miles from London (coach road 236), 19 from Scarborough, 20 from Pickering. — Gt. Nor. Rail. through Lincoln, Peterborough, and York, to Whitby station: from Derby, through York, &c., 134 miles. — Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 10½ a.m.: post closes 2½ p.m. — This is unquestionably one of the most ancient places in the kingdom, and it appears to have lived in memory, through tradition, from the earliest times after the aborigines had settled in the country; but its recorded history commences with the foundation of the abbey of Streoneshall, by St. Hilda, about the year 658. St. Hilda was a lady of a royal race; she was abbess of Hartlepool, and stood in high repute for her knowledge and piety. The celebrated antiquary, Grose, in his Antiquities, quotes Burton to the following effect respecting this convent:—"Burton, in his account of this monastery, says, 'The building was begun in 657, for men and women of the Benedictine order; and though really founded and dedicated to St. Peter, and endowed by King Oswy, yet the honour is generally given to St. Hilda, who became first prioress thereof; and it is therefore called St. Hilda's, after her.' Here, according to Tanner, many bishops, and other pious and learned men, were educated. The story goes, that in St. Hilda's time, this place and its environs were terribly overrun with serpents. These, by the prayers of St. Hilda, as the monks asserted, were deprived of their heads, and turned into stones, as the writer of her life very properly observes, to the great amazement of the beholders. But the relators of this miracle have deprived that saintess of half the honour due to her, since she kindly provided houses for the snakes so petrified—all of them being enclosed within a kind of stony matrix. These stones are still found in great quantities, and are what the fossilists call ammonites. This monastery continued in a flourishing state till about the year 867, when a party of Danes, under Ingua and Hubba, landed at Dunesley bay, two miles westward of this place, and encamped on an eminence on the east side thereof, still called Raven's hill; which name it is supposed to have obtained from the figure of that bird being worked on the Danish ensign, which was there displayed. From thence straggling into the country, they plundered and laid it waste, and among other depredations entirely destroyed this monastery, which lay in ruins for many years: the community being dispersed, only Titus the abbot fled with the relics of St. Hilda to Glastonbury. The title of abbot, given to one where the monastery was governed by an abbess, may at first seem inconsistent; but perhaps the superior placed over the men had that appellation, though subordinate to the abbess. At the Conquest, Hugh de Abrincis, an expert soldier, and a person of great note among the Norman nobility, had Whitby assigned to him as a reward for his services. This he did not long hold, but disposed of it to William de Percy, his associate in that expedition. Other accounts, and among them that printed in the Monasticon, from the register of the abbey, still in the possession of — Cholmeley, Esq., say, that the town of Whitby was, by the Conqueror, first bestowed on Hugh, Earl of Chester, and by him granted to William de Percy and his heirs, to hold it as freely as he held it of the king. Whitby being then in the possession of William de Percy, he, in the reign of William the Conqueror, refounded the monastery then lying desolate and in ruins; placing therein Benedictine monks, and dedicating it to the honour of St. Peter and St. Hilda. He gave it only the title of a priory, his brother Serlo holding the office of prior. Under this title it remained till the reign of Henry I., when it was advanced to the dignity of an abbey. The benefactions granted by this second founder were various and ample, suitable to his rank, munificence, and devotion: among them were the towns of Whitby, Stainsker, Newham, and Stachesby; the seaport of Wytesby and Hamesson; also Nordfield, Sudfield, Everley, Brokesay, and Fornelage; besides churches and fisheries, and divers other donations, too many here to enumerate; and the succeeding heirs of that family continued to endow it from time to time with a variety of valuable gifts, and many of them were there buried. Hugh, Earl of Chester, shortly after its foundation, granted to this monastery the church of St. Peter of Whitby, with all its dependencies, and also the church of Flamborough, with its tithes. It had also many other noble benefactors, whose names and grants are registered in the Monasticon. The ruins of this once famous abbey stand on a high cliff, south-east of, and overlooking the town, a little to the eastward of the parish church: for the ascending this cliff from the town, there is a flight of 200 steps. A small distance south of the abbey, Mr. Cholmeley has a fine mansion, built probably with the materials taken from it. At the west end of these remains stands an ancient cross, mounted on a pedestal, and six steps. At present it is much out of the perpendicular. A passage, printed in Leland's Collectanea, from the life of St. Hilda, says, that in the painted windows of this abbey it was shown, that, before the arrival of William the Conqueror, the bordering Scots were cannibals or man-eaters, and were, by that king, punished with the sword for so unnatural and savage a practice. The offices of this monastery are entirely taken down. The remains now standing are those of the church, which was once extremely magnificent, but certainly built since the refoundation of the monastery by Henry de Percy, of which the pointed arches bear indisputable testimony. It may, perhaps, be urged, that these arches were constructed after its first erection; but an attentive consideration of the ruins, or even of this representation of them, will demonstrate them to be coeval with the original building, which seems to have been finished on one uniform plan, and was probably built when these kind of arches were first introduced, and before the round ones were entirely left off, most of the upper ranges east of the tower being circular, as is the case in the monasteries of Brinckburn, Holy Island, Kirkstall, and many others. This church was constructed in the form of a cross, and had three aisles: over the centre of the cross, rose a strong square tower. The length of the church was about 252 feet; the breadth of the middle aisle about 30 feet, and that of the side ones, each 13 feet. The height of the tower is 104 feet; that of the wall 60." Of this noble edifice, nothing now remains. Up to the late period of 1830, there were some magnificent remnants; a tower upwards of 104 feet in height, supported by four clustered columns, rose from the centre; but on the 25th of June of that year, it was suddenly thrown down, but not without having exhibited, for several previous years, symptoms of decay. The appearance of the town of Whitby, though not in the slightest degree showy, is that of a highly respectable seaport town. It stands on both sides of the river Eske, and contains exceedingly pleasing dwellings and public institutions, especially on the western side of the Eske; the eastern and western parts of the town being connected by a bridge, the middle part of which is moveable, in order to allow ships to pass through. Whitby bears all the impress of an old port. The streets are numerous, narrow, and busy, and trend closely on the river; many of the older houses, indeed, standing almost upon the sands. But behind them, which form the ancient portion of the town, the land rises rapidly, each portion being crested with the buildings of later times. On the eastern side, the ridge at length becomes so steep as to preclude the possibility of erections, except those necessary to separate the several grounds from the different houses. On the western side, advantage has been taken of the more gentle character of the acclivity, to continue the streets which run from east to west, over the summit of the height into the country, and in this quarter it is that the most superior buildings are found. There are but few public structures, but the town is a cheerful residence, supplied with news-rooms, assembly-rooms, and all the other places of usual public resort. But the principal importance of the town and harbour arises from its position as a port. The following account is from Mr. J. Allen's elaborate History of Yorkshire:—"The improvements made in this harbour since it was taken under the care of the legislature have been very extensive. The west pier has been repeatedly rebuilt, repaired, and enlarged, and has been joined to Haggarsgate, one of the principal streets, by the erection of a broad and extensive quay. This pier was completed in 1814, and is an excellent piece of workmanship, which may vie with any pier in the kingdom, either for strength or beauty. It is faced with dressed stones of immense size, some single stones weighing about six tons each: the stones are strongly riveted together, and many of them mortised into each other. The east pier, which has also been frequently improved and extended, is now enlarging on the outside, in the same kind of durable masonry, forming a powerful barrier to defend the town and port from the fury of the German Ocean. The inner piers, which contribute to check the swell of the sea, and at the same time to throw a greater depth of water into the channel, have been built and enlarged at different periods. The burgess pier on the east side, and the Scottish head opposite it on the west, which were formerly short and ill constructed, have, in recent times, been greatly improved. The fish pier, and the jetty opposite to it at the coffee-house, are modern erections, having been built little more than 30 years ago. By the extension of the piers, and the consequent contraction of the entrance of the harbour, the sand-banks, which formerly obstructed the channel, have been cleared away, and the depth of water has been much increased. The depth at neap-tides is from ten to twelve feet; at spring-tides it is from fifteen to eighteen feet, and sometimes more. The swell of the sea is of course increased with the depth of water, and in stormy weather vessels cannot ride in safety below the bridge; but there is room above the bridge to accommodate a large fleet, the water being sufficiently deep as far as Boghall, though the channel is partly confined on the west side by a bank called the Bell Isle. Above the bridge, dolphins are fixed in the middle of the harbour, to which vessels are made fast; and below are placed buoys, or floating mooring-posts, in the spaces between the piers. Spring-tides flow on the shore at half-past three, but are later in the offing. A harbour-master is appointed by the trustees for the piers, to direct vessels to proper moorings, and maintain order in the harbour. The pilots, fourteen in number, are also under a governor. There are now two life-boats, one on each side of the harbour, and Captain Manby's apparatus is kept on the west side. The piers and quays are furnished with mooring-posts, windlasses, and other conveniences for the shipping. There are stairs at various places for descending to the water, particularly from the west pier and the quay; and there are also paved roads leading down into the harbour at various openings, called ghauts or gauts, both above the bridge and below it. The west pier and the quay are not only of the greatest utility to the harbour, but form an excellent promenade for the inhabitants of the town, extending above 600 yards in length. The extremity of the pier is also intended for the defence of the town and harbour, being constructed as a battery for six guns. Behind the south end of the same pier, immediately under the west cliff, is a well-built half-moon battery, with a small tower at each angle, and a bomb-proof magazine, with other offices behind it. Here eight guns were mounted in time of war; but within these few years the guns have been removed both from this and the pier-head battery; and long may they continue to be unnecessary. The batteries are erected from the same funds, and under the direction of the same trustees. All the works connected with this department are executed in a manner that does honour to the trustees and to the engineers whom they have employed." Since this account was written the pier has been extended, and is now about half a mile in length. The trade of Whitby is of very ancient date, the records extending to about the year 1122, when William the first abbot had a dispute with Wicheman, prior of Bridlington, respecting the tithe of fish exacted from the men of Whitby and Filey. From the roll of 1396, it appears that the tithes and spiritual dues of the port amounted to £52. 13s. 11d. in each half year, beside the tithe fish regularly supplied to the monastery.

Besides its fishery, Whitby became a great depot for coals, and the harbour is at the present moment a place of refuge for vessels plying between the northern and southern coasts of England. About the commencement of the Commonwealth, the whole marine of Whitby was composed of about 20 small vessels, manned by 120 or 130 seamen, and all employed in the coasting trade. New ships, however, continued to be built, the several articles became more numerous, and the commerce was matured, so that the inhabitants became capable of spending from £50,000 to £60,000 in improvements of the town; and many of them employed in the transport service brought in considerable profit. It was not until the year 1757, that the shipowners began to make docks on the western side of the river; but the business had so far increased, that in 1776 there were as many as 251 ships belonging to this port, besides those which were upon the stocks, and both the marine and the population had been doubled in less than forty years. There are bonding warehouses here for all foreign goods, except East India produce and tobacco, unless brought coastwise for home use, or for ships' stores. The exports to foreign stations consist chiefly of whale oil, dried fish, and alum; the imports of timber, deals, ashes, hemp, and flax. The shipments to the other ports of England consist principally of freestone from the quarries at Aislaby, sailcloth, alum, leather, corn, and bacon. The custom-house, which is a very convenient edifice, stands in Sandgate, and on one of the piers there is a small structure for the use of the governor of the pilots. Whitby has long been celebrated for its ship-building, and it was here that all the vessels used by Captain Cook, in his voyages round the world, were constructed. This branch of business—that of ship-building—appears to have been begun by the operations of Mr. Jarvis Coates, who commenced business a little before the year 1700, and was the first person who built large vessels here; but it was not until about the year 1730, that the ship-yard of the Dock Company, at the foot of Green-lane, was commenced. About four years afterwards the double dry-dock was commenced. The construction of these docks has of late contributed much to the wealth and prosperity of the town. The church stands near the top of a hill, on an eminence reached from the eastern side of the town by 190 stone steps. The edifice was originally in the Gothic style, but it has undergone so many modern transformations, that the order to which it now belongs is a nondescript. Near the communion table are several monuments of the Chomeley family, and near the door of the vestry is a superb monument of General Lascelles, a native of the town, and whose body lies buried beneath. The Presbyterians, Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, all have chapels in the town. The endowed charities produce about £160 a year. Beside these, however, there are numerous institutions supported by voluntary contributions. Whitby is generally under the government of the magistrates of the East and North Ridings of the county. By the Reform Act, it was enfranchised to return one member to parliament. The Whitby poor-law union comprises 22 parishes, with a population of something more than 20,000 persons, spread over an area of 113 square miles.

WHITCHURCH, OXFORD, a parish in the hun^d of Langtree, union of Bradfield: 42 miles from London (coach road 46), 7 from Reading, 9 from Wallingford. —Gt. West. Rail. to Reading, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through Rugby and Oxford to Reading, &c., 129 miles. —Money orders issued at Reading: London letters deliv^d. 6½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. —The village is delightfully situated in the midst of woodlands, watered by the river Thames, which here flows through the country in great beauty, and overarched by a light bridge of oak, built in 1793, with a balustrade on each side, and from which there are several most pleasing views. The church is principally in the Norman style of architecture, the chancel being separated from the nave by one lofty arch of remarkably fine proportions. It contains many monuments of the families of Powys and Lybbe, besides several others of distinction. An institution, founded by Samuel Gardner, Esq., in 1817, for the instruction of children in a rural education, stands at the upper part of the village. Besides this, several small territorial charities belong to the village. —The living (St. Mary), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Oxford, is valued at £16. 2s. 8½d.: pres. net income, £456: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, Edw. Moore, 1840: contains 2,070 acres: 144 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 843: ass^d. prop^r £2,805: poor rates in 1848, £342. 10s. Tithes commuted in 1810. —Coombe Lodge, a fine mansion of the Ionic order, is the seat of Samuel Gardner, Esq. On the north, it is protected by several excellent plantations, and commands fine views towards the south. Mr. Gardner, who is a deputy-lieutenant for the county, claims his descent from Stephen Gardner, secretary to Cardinal Wolsey, in the time of Henry VIII., and chancellor of England in the reign of Queen Mary. From him was descended Henry Gardner, Esq. of Castle Coombe, in the county of Wilts, and from that gentleman was descended Charles Wright Gardner, Esq., who was for many years military secretary of the East India Company at Calcutta. The present proprietor of the estates, Samuel Wear Gardner, of Coombe Lodge, is the representative of that gentleman.—Hardwick House, also in this parish, is the seat of Henry Powys, Esq. The mansion, which dates its origin from the time of Richard II., originally belonged to the distinguished family of the Hardwicks, from whom it took its name, and continued with them until it fell, by purchase, into the possession of the Lybbe family, who held it for 200 years. In 1730 it passed, on the marriage of Isabella, heiress of Richard Lybbe, Esq., to Philip Powys, Esq., youngest son of Sir Thomas Powys of Silford, in Shropshire, whose representative is its present possessor. The mansion, through some comparatively recent repairs, has regained all its old baronial characteristics. The woods surrounding the mansion are very beautiful. —Admiral Meyrick has also a residence here.

WHITCHURGH (or EOLWYS-WEN), PEMBROKE, a parish in the hun^d of Cemmaes, union of Cardigan, South Wales: it contains the chapelry of Llanfair-Nant-y-Gof: 258 miles from London (coach road 241), 8 from Cardigan, 8 from Newport. —Gt. WHITCHURCH (or THE-CROES), PEMBROKE, a parish in the hun^d of Dewisland, union of Haverfordwest, South Wales: 256 miles from London (coach road 263), 13 from Haverfordwest, 3 from St. David's. —Gt. West. Rail. through Stonehouse, Gloucester, and Chepstow, to Haverfordwest, thence 13 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Gloucester, &c., 247 miles. —Money orders issued at Haverfordwest: London letters deliv^d at noon: post closes 5 p.m.—The Independents, Baptists, and Calvinistic Methodists, all have chapels here.—The living, a disch^d vicarage in the diocese of St. David's, is valued at £5. 15s. 7½d.: pres. net income, £101: patron, Bishop and Chaplain of St. David's: pres. incumbent, J. P. Williams: contains 258 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,120: ass^d. prop^r £1,773: poor rates in 1848, £371. 2s.

WHITCHURCH (or BLANCOMINSTER), SALOP, a market town and parish, partly in the Whitchurch division of the hun^d of Bradford, in the above county, and partly in the hun^d of Nantwich, copalatine of Chester: that part of the parish which is in Chester contains only part of the small township of Wirswall: the other portion includes the townships of Alkington, Great Ash, Little Ash, Black Park, Broughall, Doddington, Edgeby, Hinton, and Hollyhurst with Chimnal, the chapelry of Tilstock, the town of Whitchurch, and part of Wirswall: 170 miles from London (coach road 163), 19 from Shrewsbury, 11 from Market-Drayton.—Nor. West. Rail. to Crewe, thence 13 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 70 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m.—Through the munificence of Lady Shrewsbury, a new church, in the Grecian style, has been erected for the service of the inhabitants, the accommodation rendered being for about 700 persons. St. Catherine's is a curacy, and Tilstock, also a perpetual curacy, both within the range of the parish. There was formerly here an hospital for several poor brethren, to which John le Strange, in the reign of Henry III., gave the town of Winelecôt, the endowments of which were afterwards annexed to the abbey of Haghmen. The Presbyterians, Unitarians, Baptists, Independents, and Wesleyan Methodists, all have chapels here. The free grammar-school was founded by the Rev. John Talbot, who was for some time rector of this parish. The Earl of Shrewsbury is hereditary visitor, and the government is now vested in the hands of trustees; its income amounts to about £454 per annum. Another of the schools is supported by an endowment of £40 per annum. Beside these there are several charities, supported by voluntary endowment; the other endowments are valuable. The benefactions of Samuel and Jane Higginson, for education and alms, yield about £240 a year, part of which is applied for educational purposes to the national school; the remainder is divided between the parishes of Hamner in Flintshire, and Ellesmere. The other charities produce about £200 a year. The town, which stands on a gentle eminence, is well built, and commands several fine points of view.—The living, a rectory, with that of Marbury, in the diocese of Sarum, is valued at £44. 11s. 8d.: pres. net income, £1,458: patron, Countess of Bridgewater: pres. incumbent, W. H. Egerton, 1846: contains 15,380 acres: 1,148 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 6,373: do. in 1851, 7,328: ass^d. prop^r £30,062. Tithes of Doddington commuted in 1839.—Market day, Friday. Fairs: second Friday in April, Whit-Monday, Friday after August 2, October 28.—Banks: National Provincial Bank of England—draw on London and Westminster Bank; Whitchurch and Ellesmere Banking Co.—draw on Union Bank of London.

WHITCHURCH (or FELTON), SOMERSET, a parish in the hun^d and union of Keynsham: 121 miles from London, 3 from Bristol, 3 from Pensford.—Gt. West. Rail. to Bristol, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham to Bristol, &c., 133 miles.—Money orders issued at Bristol: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 4 p.m.—It is recorded that the first name of this place arose from a very ancient town, seated in the almost forgotten chase of Filwood, lying to the north-west of the present village, from which it had its name, and where, in subsequent periods, the abbots of Keynsham had their grange. Hitherto it had only been an appanage, but a church having been erected on the most easterly part of the territory, where there had once been a cell of the British saint, St. Whyte, and Felton thenceforth running to depopulation, the district of Whitchurch became the home of the inhabitants, and was sometimes called Felton and sometimes Whitechurch, and is even now known both by one term and the other.—The living (St. Gregory) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Bath, and diocese of Bath and Wells: pres. net income, £88: patrons, Sir J. Smyth, Bart., and W. G. Langton, Esq.: pres. incumbent, G. R. Blackburn, 1844: contains 4,180 acres: 69 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 416: ass^d. prop^r £3,657: poor rates in 1848, £109. 12s. Tithes commuted in 1839.

WHITCHURCH, HANTS, a parish, a disfranchised borough, and formerly a market town, in the hun^d of Evingar, union of Whitchurch, Kingsclere division of the county, situated on the river Teste, a celebrated trouting stream: besides the borough and town, the parish comprises the tithings of Charlecot, Cold Henley, and Freefolk with Freefolk-Prior: 65 miles from London (coach road 57), 12 from Winchester, 12 from Newbury.—Gt. West. Rail. to Newbury, thence 12 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Newbury, &c., 152 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 3 p.m.: post closes 8½ p.m.—The town is irregularly but picturesquely built, and has of late years been very much improved. Most of the inhabitants are engaged in the manufacture of shalloons and serges; but there is also here a large mill, at which most of the paper used for bank notes is manufactured. In addition to this, a few years ago, there was a silk mill, in which 108 hands were engaged, while a few handloom weavers were also engaged in connection with the manufactories in Spitalfields. The Dean and Chapter of Winchester, who are lords of the manor, hold a court annually in October in the town-hall, at which a titular mayor and bailiff, constituting the corporation, are appointed. Whitchurch formerly returned two members to parliament, but was disfranchised by the Reform Act. The Wesleyan Methodists, Baptists, and Independents, have places of worship here. In 1688, Richard Wollaston White, Esq., bequeathed property which now yields £80 a year, and which is distributed annually in clothes and other allowances among the poor. The Whitchurch poor-law union comprises seven parishes, with a population of about 6,000 persons, spread over an area of 44 square miles.

—The living (All Saints), a vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £13. 12s. 8½d.: pres. net income, £205: patron, Bishop of Winchester: pres. incumbent, W. M. Dudley, 1844: popⁿ in 1841, 1,741: do. in 1851, 2,002. Tithes commuted in 1840. —Fairs: July 8 and Oct. 19.

WHITEFORD (OR WHITFORD), FLINT, a parish in the hun^d of Coleshill, union of Holywell, North Wales, near the estuary of the river Dee: it includes the townships of Bychton, Eden-Owain-Merton, Is-Glan, Merton-Uwch-Glan, Mostyn, Tre-Lan, Tre'r-Abbot, and Whiteford: 198 miles from London (coach road 216), 3 from Holywell, 7 from St. Asaph. —Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe and Chester to Holywell, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 98 miles. —Money orders issued at Holywell: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. —The church was built by Blethyn Drow, one of the Mostyn family. The parish abounds with lead, zinc, calamine, copper ore, limestone, and cherts, all of which minerals are wrought to a considerable extent. The Independents and Calvinistic Methodists have chapels in the village. The charities produce, besides two small endowments for schools, about £137 per annum. In the township of Whiteford-Garn there are some remains of an ancient pharos, or lighthouse, said by tradition to have been erected by the Romans, to assist mariners in the old navigation of the Deva, through the Sætra Portus. Near Garreg there is a cross, commonly known as the "Stone of Lamentation." It is a very beautiful structure. Mostyn Hall is within the boundaries of the parish. This was the native place of Thomas Pennant, the author of the "Tours through England and Wales." He was born in 1726, and died in 1794. The livings are a sinecure rectory, rated at £28. 17s. 6d.; gross income, £739; and a discharged vicarage, rated at £9. 11s. 5½d.; gross income, £417: both in the diocese and patronage of the Bishop of St. Asaph: contains 800 acres: 609 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 4,034: do. in 1851, 4,639: ass^d. prop^r. £4,000: poor rates in 1848, £382. 11s.

WHITEGATE (or NEW CHURCH), CHESTER, a parish in the first division of the hund^d. of Eddisbury, union of Northwich, on the river Weaver: it comprises the townships of Darnhall and Marton, and once formed part of the parish of Over: 171 miles from London (coach road 176), 4 from Northwich, 7 from Tarporley. Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe to Hartford station, thence 2 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 71 miles. Money orders issued at Northwich: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. It was here that Edward I., previous to his accession to the throne, was confined by the refractory barons; and in gratitude to the monks of Dore, who had shown him great kindness, removed them to Darnhall, and afterwards began to build a new monastery in the immediate neighbourhood, to which he gave the name of Vale-Royal, but the building was not occupied until the year 1330, when the removal was effected with great magnificence—many prelates, nobles, and other dignitaries being present on the occasion. At the general dissolution, the revenues of the institution amounted to £518 a year. There is a mansion within the precincts of the parish, the doorways of which are the only remnants of the monastery. The inhabitants of the parish, under certain regulations, are entitled to send their children to the grammar-school for Whitegate and Over. A free school has also been built here by Lord Delamere, who endowed it with £20 a year. The other charities produce about £24 per annum. The living, a vicarage in the diocese of Chester, is valued at £2. 10s.: pres. net income, £163: patron, Lord Delamere: pres. incumbent, William Whitley, 1825: contains 7,090 acres: 171 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 872: ass^d. prop^r. £4,143. The Mansion is the principal residence of Thomas Cholmondeley, Lord Delamere, who derives his immediate descent from Sir Hugh Cholmondeley, who married Mary, only daughter and heiress of Christopher Holford, Esq. of Holford, by whom he had, with other issue, Hugh, the ancestor of the present Marquis of Cholmondeley, and Thomas, who, by the gift of his mother, obtained the estate of Vale-Royal. From him, through a series of distinguished posterity, who, in their generations, mostly occupied places in parliament, was descended the present nobleman, who was elevated to the peerage in the year 1821.

WHITEHAVEN, CUMBERLAND, a flourishing seaport, parliamentary borough, and market town, in the parish of St. Bees, Allerdale ward above Derwent, on the western coast: 340 miles from London (coach road 294), 4 from Cockermouth, 8 from Workington. Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe, Lancaster, and Carlisle, to Whitehaven station: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 240 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7½ and 11.50 a.m.: post closes 1.20 and 6 p.m. The origin of the name of this town seems to be involved in great obscurity. By some authorities it is supposed to have been derived from the white-coloured rocks which exist in the vicinity of the town, and by others, from the name of a fisherman who built the first cottage on its site; but, at any rate, its appellation of Whitehaven is preserved in the records of a trial between the abbot and monks of St. Mary at York and the king, respecting some wrecks which had been driven on shore in the parish of St. Bees, the manor being in the possession of the monks. In the reign of Queen Elizabeth, it consisted of only a few fishermen's huts. But the manor having passed, by purchase, through Sir Thomas Challoner to the hands of Gerard Lowther and Thomas Wyburgh in 1644, Sir John Lowther, a descendant of the former, by his care, the town greatly increased, and soon advanced to its present state of importance. That gentleman obtained a large grant of lands from Charles II., extended the collieries, and very greatly improved the harbour; and having fixed his residence near to the town, contributed greatly to further its interests, and at length caused it, under divine providence, to become a very flourishing seaport. The accession of his successors to the peerage gave them greater influence, and when they attained the earldom of Lonsdale, that influence was very largely increased, and having always used it beneficially, Whitehaven became one of the busiest ports, and most flourishing towns in the county. There are three chapels here, the livings of which are all perpetual curacies, in the archdeaconry of Richmond, and diocese of Chester. They are all in the patronage of the Earl of Lonsdale. That of St. Nicholas was returned at £140; gross income, £192. The chapel is a plain substantial building, with a square tower, erected in 1693; it contains several paintings of considerable merit, by Matthias Reed, a Dutch artist, who settled here, having come from Holland with the Prince of Orange. That of St. James's is returned at £108. 16s.; gross income, £200. The chapel has a tower surmounted by pinnacles; it is situated in the eastern part of the town. That of the Holy Trinity is returned at £92: gross income, £250. The chapel is a plain structure, with a lofty tower, at the head of Roper Street. Here are an Independent church, formed in 1820; a Wesleyan Methodist, formed in 1747; places of worship for the Presbyterians, Particular Methodists, Baptists, and Primitive Methodists, a Friends' meeting-house, and a Roman Catholic chapel. One of the schools, called "Piper's Marine School," was endowed, in 1818, with £2,000 navy annuities for the education of 60 males, as is also another partly by endowment. Preston Quarter township was a national school, attended by 447 children of both sexes, and chiefly supported by subscription. Other charities, in 1826, £30. 16s. 4d. per annum: poor rates of the township, in 1838, £2,107. 5s. Topographically stated, the town of Whitehaven is situated at the mouth of the river Poebbeck, being so deeply seated that it is overlooked by the elevated grounds which rise on every side of it; so much so, indeed, that only the slated roofs of the houses can be seen immediately on the approach to the town from the north. Here it is entered by a handsome portico of freestone. Whitehaven is well built, and constitutes one of the most imposing towns in the county, with handsome shops and a spacious market-place, many of the buildings presenting a degree of elegance seldom met with in that part of the country. The market-house, a neat structure, stands in Lowther Street, and here the petty sessions for the ward, Cockermouth, and Workington are held. The castle, the seat of the Earl of Lonsdale, of which we have already spoken in another article, is situated to the south-east. The streets are spacious, well lighted, and well paved, and the inhabitants are well supplied with water, partly from wells within the town, and partly from carriage by carts from the vicinity. It is almost needless to say, that such a community as forms that of Whitehaven have a pleasing theatre, and are well furnished with the appliances of news and reading rooms, and all the other necessities for sociable and intellectual enjoyments. The trade chiefly consists in the exportation of lime, iron-coal, gypsum, iron, freestone, and grain, and the importation of Baltic, West Indian, and American produce, with some flax and linen from Ireland, and pig-iron from Wales, the customs duties averaging nearly £100,000 per annum. The custom-house is a handsome building; and there are here excellent docks, building-yards, patent slips, and other conveniences, capable of accommodating vessels of large burthen in every state. The harbour is formed by the mouth of the Poebbeck, and is protected by piers of stones bending from either side, on each of which there is a lighthouse. In the interior of the harbour there are three piers which run in parallel lines, and which are connected with the side piers. Altogether this capacious receptacle is capable of sheltering several hundred vessels. Formerly it was defended by four batteries, which were repaired after the attack of the notorious Paul Jones in 1771, but after that attempt they were suffered to fall into decay. The town and harbour are governed by two acts passed in the reign of Queen Anne. Under the Reform Act, Whitehaven returns one member to parliament. — Popⁿ in 1841, 11,854: ass^d. prop^y. £42,898: poor rates in 1848, £2,107. 5s. — Market days, Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday. Mr. Bristowe derives his descent from John de Bristowe, who lived in the year 1399, and was one of the posterity of Sir John de Bristowe of Burstowe, in Surrey, who was assessor for the county, and cupbearer to Henry IV. That gentleman was ancestor of John Bristowe of Lee, a gentleman mentioned in St. George's visitation in 1634. From that period the family always enjoyed a distinguished position in their several localities, having been members of parliament, and various times ministers of state. The present head of the family, Robert Bristowe, Esq., who succeeded to the estates in 1841, is a magistrate for the county. — Melchet Park, a very pleasing demesne, is the seat of the Hon. and Rev. Frederick Baron, next brother to Lord Ashburton. — Cowsfield House, a fine mansion on the southern slope of Dean Hill, commanding extensive views over the New Forest and the Isle of Wight, is the seat of George Lawrence, Esq.

Besides it there are the remnants of another fortification, and of a beacon.—(Other returns with TORPENHOW.)

WHITSTABLE (or WHITSTAPLE), KENT, a parish and small seaport town, the port of Canterbury, in the upper half hun^d of Whitstable, union of Blean, lathe of St. Augustine, near the entrance to the Swale, opposite to Sheppey Isle, on the river Thames: it contains the hamlet of Harwich: 88 miles from London (coach road 55), 7 from Canterbury, 6 from Herne Bay: Sou. East. Rail. through Ashford and Canterbury to Whitstable station: from Derby, through London, &c., 220 miles.—Money orders issued at Canterbury: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m.—It was from this place to Canterbury, that the first passable commercial and passenger railway in England was formed. The town, situated on the sea-coast, though offering comparatively few attractions, is well built, quiet, and agreeable. It is somewhat peculiar in its aspect, for the turnpike road to Canterbury crosses the western side to the sea-shore, and on each margin of this roadway stands the village or town of Whitstable. The railroad runs from the extremity of the harbour. Most of the inhabitants are employed in the dredging and transmission of oysters, which are abundantly found in the bed of the river, and are of the highest quality. The Wesleyan Methodists have a chapel here. The charities produce about £208 a year. — The living (All Saints), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y and diocese of Canterbury, is valued at £22. 10s.: pres. net income, £150: patron, Archbishop of Canterbury: pres. incumbent, R. Cole Orton Hall, a noble mansion, surrounded by beautiful grounds, is the seat of Sir George Howland Willoughby Beaumont, Bart., whose very ancient name is derived from the Beaumonts, viccounts of France; and one of whose heiresses, Agnes, conveyed the seignory to Louis, her husband, second son of Charles, king of Jerusalem and Sicily, and Louis IX., king of France. Henry de Beaumont, the fourth son of the lady just spoken of, and who obtained high and confidential employment in this country in the time of Edward I., was brother to Isabel, wife of John Lord Vespi of Alnwick. He was created king of the Isle of Man for life, on the same tenure that the territory had been usually held by the kings of Scotland, and was formally acknowledged as being of the blood-royal, was summoned to parliament in 1309, and in the same year sworn a member of the privy council. His lordship married Alice, daughter, and at length heir, of Alexander Comin, Earl of Bogtan, through whom he became constable of Scotland, and obtained the manor of Whitwick, with license to convert the house into a castle. His lordship died in 1340, when the barony fell to his son, John de Beaumont, who was summoned to parliament in 1342. That nobleman married Lady Allanore Plantagenet, daughter of Henry Earl of Lancaster, and great grand-daughter of Henry III., by whom he had an only child, born in Brabant, during her ladyship's attendance upon Philippa, Queen of Edward III. The barony afterwards, having been held by many distinguished persons, fell into abeyance; but one of his descendants, Thomas Beaumont, Esq., of Stoughton Grange, was created a baronet in 1660, and of him the present head of the family is a direct descendant. Sir George married Mary Anne, eldest daughter of the venerable and excellent Dr. Howley, Archbishop of Canterbury.

WIBSEY, WEST RIDING, YORK, a chapelry in the parish of Bradford—(which see for access, &c.)—wapentake of Morley: 199 miles from London, 3 from Bradford, 5 from Halifax. Sir George Head, in speaking of this place, says—"In this region of iron and coal—for the whole of Wibsey moor is rich in both—the approach to these magnificent foundries bears the type of universal combustion, as in the vicinity of a crater of a volcano. To witness a more awful picture, produced by the combined features of fire, smoke, and ashes, an individual must bend his steps at least towards Etna or Vesuvius. For a long way, the surface of the moor is covered with heaps of calcined shale and cinders, the collection of many years, upon which, here and there, plants of furze have spontaneously taken root. From these, the eye, attracted on wards, rests on a cluster of low blackened buildings, containing numerous fires, for the purpose of charking the coal used in smelting the metal; and among the more massive piles of brickwork, broad flaring flames, crawling upwards from the main furnaces, exhibit an awful appearance; for the mouth of each of these furnaces is near ten feet in diameter, its form that of an ordinary limekiln, and on the summit, in the midst of the eager flames, strange-looking wheels recall to the memory a whole host of mythological images—such as the instrument of torment whereon the ill-fated Ixion expiated the vengeance, not undeservedly, of ancient Jupiter. These wheels are appendages of the machinery by means of which the ore is dragged up an inclined plane, on iron waggons, to the mouths of the furnaces; which waggons, self-acting, where no living power could perform the office, turn topsy-turvy, and there unload their contents. It is a noble sight to stand here and see the devastating element in such radiant glory, yet at the same time under perfect subjection; but awful to reflect that human science will never, probably, wholly avert those catastrophes which, either by combustion or explosion, in the melancholy reverse of fortune, serve to remind man of the finitude of his wisdom, by occasionally obtruding the fortunes of the victim on the victor."—The living, a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Ripon, is valued at £13. 5s.: pres. net income, £250: patron, Vicar of Bradford: pres. incumbent, J. Money orders issued at Alresford: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. Some trifling charities belong to the parish. The living (St. James) is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y. and diocese of Winchester: pres. net income, £64: patron, Earl of Portsmouth: pres. incumbent, John Griffin: contains 2,100 acres: 53 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 278: ass^d. prop^r. £1,601.

WIGAN, LANCASTER, a parish, borough, and market town, in the hund^d. of West Derby and Salford, union of Wigan, intersected by the Leeds and Liverpool Canal: besides the town of Wigan, the parish comprises the chapelries of St. George, Abram, Billinge-Chapel-End, Haigh, Hindley, Holland, Pemberton, and Scholes-Church, and the townships of Billinge-Higher-End, Dalton, Ince, Orrel, and Winstanly, all in the hund^d. of West Derby, and the township of Aspull, in the hund^d. of Salford: 195 miles from London (coach road 200), 17 from Preston, 19 from Manchester. Gt. West. Rail. from Crewe to Wigan station: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 95 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 5½ p.m.: post closes 8 a.m. and 10 p.m. The town, which is situated on a height, is bounded on the west by the river Douglas, near its spring. Great part of it is old and ill-built, but being well situated for trade, the place has of late years very largely increased, and many of the modern streets are of pleasing and some of them of handsome elevation. There are, however, still some remains of the Elizabethan era. The town-hall, which was erected in 1720, is a quaint but pleasing structure; the sessions-house was rebuilt in 1829. Near Standish gate there are the remains of an ancient relic, called "Mab's Cross." The living of the parish is a rectory in the archd^y. and diocese of Chester; rated at £80. 13s. 4d.: gross income, £2,823. Tithes commuted in 1839; aggregate amount £123. 16s. 7d. Patron, in 1841, the Earl of Bradford. The church is a fine stately building of unknown antiquity. St. George's is a perpetual curacy, returned at £36; gross income, £142: patron, the rector. All the other chapelries above-named are also perpetual curacies in the patronage of the rector. Independent churches were formed in 1777 and 1814; Wesleyan Methodist in 1776 and 1790; and there are places of worship for Presbyterians, Baptists, Swedenborgians, Independent Methodists, and Roman Catholics. The endowed charities appropriated to the parish, and to the various townships, are numerous; but, with some few exceptions, they are severally of minor importance. The annual revenue derived from the whole, including those for educational purposes, amounted, in 1830, to about £2,000. Here are a school of industry, a dispensary, clothing and other societies, a savings bank, &c. Poor rates, in 1838, of the parish, £8,423. 19s.; of the township, £3,192. 3s. The Wigan poor-law union comprehends 20 parishes, with a total population of 66,032 in 1841. Expenditure for the years ending 25th March, 1840, £9,486; and 1841, £10,725. 13s.; average annual expenditure of the three years preceding the formation of union, £8,486. Wigan derives most of its prosperity from its coal and iron mines, which furnish the materials for its numerous manufactories, the chief of which are used for the making of cotton and the construction of machinery. The textile articles produced consist chiefly of checks, linens, fustians, and calicoes; the smaller articles of metal, of edge tools, spades, and agricultural implements. The steam-engines, as might be expected, are very numerous. Wigan has received several charters of incorporation: the first bearing the date of the 7th year of Edward II. Under the Municipal Reform Act it was included in schedule A, obtained a commission of the peace, a recorder, and is divided into five wards, governed by ten aldermen and thirty common councillors. Their public income amounts to about £3,000 a year. The borough has sent members to parliament ever since the 23d year of Edward I. Under the Reform Act two members are still returned, and the municipal and parliamentary boundaries of the borough are made coincident. The petty sessions for the hundred of Warrington are held here. Contains 27,610 acres: 8,032 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 51,988: ass^d. prop^r. £95,506: poor rates in 1848, £8,423. 19s. Tithes commuted in 1839. Market days, Monday and Friday. Fairs: Holy Thursday, June 27, July 1st, and Oct. 28. Bankers: Thomas Woodcock and Sons—draw on Barclay, Bevan, &

Co.; Branch of Manchester and Liverpool District Banking Co.—draw on Smith, Payne, and Smith.

—Haigh Hall, a fine domain, is the seat of James Lindsay, Earl of Balcarres, of Eastferry Abbey, in the county of Fife; Baron Lindsay of Balcarres; Lord Lindsay and Balmiel, in the peerage of Scotland; Baron Wigan of Haigh Hall, in the peerage of the United Kingdom, who inherited his Scottish honours at the decease of his father, as seventh earl, in 1825, and acquired the barony of Wigan by patent in 1826. His lordship, who is the representative of one of the most eminent families in the United Kingdom, is the most prominent member of several races, who, according to Sir William Dugdale, had for centuries held distinguished positions in the country, and one of whom is believed to have been the proprietor of the lands and manor of Lindsay, in Essex, at a very early period. It is the opinion of the Scottish antiquaries that that eminent personage went with King Malcolm Canmore, and settled in Scotland, obtained the lands of Wachopdale, and established the family of Lindsay beyond the Tweed. Towards the close of the 14th century, Sir David Lindsay, one of the most gallant knights of the period, was elevated to the peerage of Scotland by the title of Earl of Crawford. The title became extinct in the ninth generation, but the peerage was restored in the person of Sir David Lindsay, the son of an eminent Scottish lawyer and senator, who was created Lord Lindsay of Balcarres. His son Alexander, the second baron, was, for his distinguished service and loyalty, in 1661, created Earl of Balcarres, and from that nobleman the present peer is a direct descendant.

WIGAN, LANCASTER, a township in the above parish.—(For access and postal arrangements, see above.)—Contains 2,170 acres: 3,870 houses: ass^d. prop^r. £33,320: poor rates in 1848, £3,192. 3s.

WIGBOROUGH (GREAT), ESSEX, a parish in the hun^d. of Winstree, union of Lexden and Winstree: the parish is bounded by a creek of the Blackwater river called Verley, on the north: it contains the hamlet of Salcot-Wigborough: 58 miles from London (coach road 47), 9 from Kelvedon, 7 from Colchester.—East. Co^a. Rail. to Colchester, thence 7 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 190 miles.—Money orders issued at Kelvedon: London letters deliv^d. 10 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m.—The church, which is situated on the summit of a lofty eminence, has a fine view towards the sea and the Blackwater. The Independents have a chapel in the village. The charities produce about £9 a year. There were formerly some salt-works in this neighbourhood, whence the parish is sometimes called Wigborough-Salcot.—The living (St. Stephen), a rectory in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £18. 17s. 6d.: pres. net income, £591: patrons, Messrs. Brewer and Fookes: pres. incumbent, Godfrey Bird, 1832: contains 2,700 acres: 51 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 479: ass^d. prop^r. £3,340: poor rates in 1848, £285.

WIGBOROUGH (LITTLE), ESSEX, a parish in the hun^d. of Winstree, union of Lexden and Winstree: bounded on the east by the Mersey channel, and on the south by the Verley, both of which creeks are branches of the Blackwater: 48 miles from London, 11 from Maldon, 11 from Witham.

WIGMORE, HEREFORD, a parish in the hund^d of the same name, union of Ludlow: it contains the township of Limebrook: 148 miles from London (coach road 147), 8 from Ludlow, 10 from Leominster. —Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Worcester, thence 30 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham to Worcester, &c., 101 miles. —Money orders issued at Leominster: London letters deliv^d 12 noon: post closes 9 p.m. —In the neighbourhood there are the remains of what was once the stately castle of Wigmore, consisting of a few vestiges of the keep. The outer works are in a tolerable state of preservation. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—The college of three prebendaries founded here in the year 1100, by Ralph de Mortimer, dropped on the foundation of the abbey which this Ralph left upon his death-bed, with his son and heir, Sir Hugh de Mortimer. Pursuant thereto, Sir Oliver de Merlimound, their steward, began a religious house at Scobedon or Schobdene, in the reign of Henry I.; and having made some small endowments, procured a prior and two canons from St. Victor at Paris, to come hither. The want of water and other inconveniences made them remove to Eye near Aylmster, upon the river Lugg. Hence they went to Wigmore, then to Beodune, and back again to Shobdon, but were finally settled, A.D. 1179, in a noble monastery—about a mile beyond Wigmore town and castle, in the marsh ground towards Shrewsbury—built, and so amply endowed as to be made an abbey, and at the sole expense of the said Hugh Mortimer. It was of the order of St. Austin, commended to the patronage of St. James, and rated in the 26th of Henry VIII, at £267. 2s. 10d. ob. per ann. Dugdals; £302. 12s. 3d. ob. Speed. The site was granted, 2d Edward VI., to Sir Thomas Palmer; 3d and 4th Philip and Mary, to Philip Cockerham.

—The living, a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y and diocese of Hereford, is valued at £8: pres. net income, £120: patron, Bishop of Hereford: pres. incumbent, J. J. Trollope, 1842: contains 3,290 acres: 98 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 503: ass^d. prop^r. £2,184: poor rates in 1848, £136. 18s. —Fairs:

WIGSTON (MAGNA), LEICESTER, a parish in the hund^d of Guthlaxton, union of Blaby: 107 miles from London (coach road 94), 4 from Leicester, 12 from Market-Harborough. —Nor. West. Rail. through Rugby to Leicester, thence 4 miles: from Derby, through Leicester, &c., 33 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. —This place is chiefly occupied for manufactures, one of the principal firms employing several hundred hands in the manufacture of stockings. There are, of course, in a wealthy community, many excellent houses. Wigston is sometimes called Wigston-two-Steeple, from the circumstance of there being two churches in one churchyard. One of them has, however, been long disused, and is now fast falling into decay; but the tower and spire, together with the greater part of the structure, still remain in a tolerable state of preservation, and constitute a most interesting object in the landscape. The principal parish church is a very fine building, with a tower surmounted by a lofty spire. The interior is commodious, and has handsome galleries. The Independents, and Primitive and Wesleyan Methodists, have chapels in the village. The educational institutions for the poor are numerous, and are liberally supported. Besides these there are six almshouses well endowed, and several minor charities. At the south end of the town there is an excellent mansion with beautiful grounds, which is used as a lunatic asylum. —The living (All Saints), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y of Leicester, and diocese of Peterborough, is valued at £9. 8s. 9d.: pres. net income, £107: patron, Haberdashers' Company, and Christ's Hospital, alternately: pres. incumbent, Wm. Trollope, 1834: contains 2,780 acres: 452 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,189: do. in 1851, 2,517: ass^d. prop^r. £6,123: poor rates in 1848, £769. 7s. Tithes, inappropriate and vicarial, commuted in 1764. —Wigston Hall, a mansion of considerable beauty, surrounded by fine grounds, and commanding beautiful views of the surrounding country, is the seat of Captain C. Holland Baddesley.

WIGSTON (PARVA), LEICESTER, a chapelry in the parish of Claybrooke, union of Lutterworth: 96 miles from London, 3 from Claybrooke, 4 from Hinckley. —(For access and postal arrangements, see above.) —The living is a curacy, annexed to the vicarage of Claybrooke: contains 14 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 74: ass^d. prop^r. £678: poor rates in 1848, £52. 2s.

WIGTOFT, LINCOLN, a parish in the wapentake of Kirkton, union of Boston, parts of Holland: 102 miles from London (coach road 105), 9 from Spalding, 7 from Boston. —Gt. Nor. Rail. to Spalding, thence 9 miles: from Derby, through Nottingham and Grantham to Boston, &c., 75 miles. —Money orders issued at Spalding: London letters deliv^d 10 a.m.: post closes 5 p.m. —The parochial charities produce about £58 a year, which is appropriated to educational purposes. —The living, a disch^d. vicarage, with that of Quadding, in the archd^y. and diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £11. 5s.: pres. net income, £412: patron, Bishop of Lincoln: pres. incumbent, J. Wilson, 1840: contains 3,300 acres: 144 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 713: ass^d. prop^r. £4,699: poor rates in 1848, £448. 16s. Tithes commuted in 1772.

WIGTON, CUMBERLAND, a parish in the union of Wigton, ward of Cumberland: it contains the market town of the same name, the townships of Oulton (High and Low), Waverton, and Woodside Quarter: 311 miles from London (coach road 303), 11 from Carlisle, 15 from Cockermouth. —Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe and Lancaster to Carlisle, thence 11 miles: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 211 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 9½ a.m.: post closes 3½ p.m. and 7.40 p.m. —There are but few records of the history of this ancient town; but from those that remain, it appears that the demesne of Wigton was granted, before the Conquest, to Waldis, lord of Allerdale, by William de Meschines, and by him was given to Edvard de Logos, who, on the descent of William the Conqueror on this country, assumed the name of De Wigton. During the border wars, in 1322, the town was burnt to the ground. Wigton is prettily situated in an undulating country, in which there is little level land, but in which there is also no eminence worthy of consideration as a hill; the prospects are therefore more pleasing than striking. It consists principally of two streets, the smaller one being placed transversely at the end of the larger one. A church was built here in the time of the Norman Conquest, but it was taken down and rebuilt in 1788. The Independents, Baptists, and Wesleyan Methodists, all have chapels in the town, as also have the Roman Catholics. The free grammar-school was erected in the year 1730, each of the subscribers paying subscriptions in accordance with the farms which they held in the neighbourhood, and in consequence of which their descendants have the right of sending their children to the school, free of expense. The principal income of the institution, as it now exists, is derived from a bequest of £1,000 in the 3 per cent. consols, made in the year 1800 by Mr. John Allison, and from £355 left by the Rev. Joseph Tomlinson, the master being provided with a house, and elected, as well as his usher, by the inhabitants of the houses, the tenants of which originally subscribed to the school. The other educational institutions are very numerous. Mr. Tomlinson also founded houses, in 1724, for the benefit of six indigent widows of benefited clergymen, or curates of at least two years' standing, but confined to the relics of the diocese of Carlisle, or that part of Cumberland which is in the diocese of Chester, or to the rectories of Rotham and Wickham, in Northumberland. The widows are required to be above 46 years of age, and none are admitted who have not more than £10 a year from other sources. Each inmate receives £8 a year, and has two apartments, and a garden. The Bishop of Carlisle is the visitor, his deputies being the chancellor of the diocese, the vicar of Wigton, and the rectors of Caldbeck, Aikton, and Aspatria. Many manufactures of gingham, and the finer classes of the cotton goods, are carried on here; the number of looms employed amounting to several hundreds. The Wigton poor-law union comprises a population of about 23,000 souls, spread over an area of 244 square miles. —The living (St. Mary), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y. and diocese of Carlisle, is valued at £17. 19s. 0½d.: pres. net income, £150: patron, Bishop of Carlisle: pres. incumbent, J. Irving, 1826: contains 972 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 6,432: do. in 1851, 7,397: ass^d. prop^r. £8,445: poor rates in 1848, £518. 12s. —Market day, Tuesday. Fairs: Feb. 20, for horses; April 5, for cattle; Whit-Tuesday and Martinmas-Tuesday, for servants. —Bankers: Bank of Whitehaven—draw on Price, Marryat, and Co.; Branch of Cumberland Union Banking Co.—draw on Barclay, Bevan, and Co.; Carlisle and Cumberland Banking Co.—draw on Hankeys and Co.

Richard Watson: pres. incumbent, E. Griffin, Jun., 1831: contains 2,800 acres: 155 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 684: ass^d. prop^r. £3,029: poor rates in 1848, £328. 1s.

WILBERFOSS, EAST RIDING, YORK, a parish in the Wilton-Beacon division of the wapentake of Harthill, union of Pocklington: it contains the townships of Newton-upon-Derwent and Wilberfoss: 218 miles from London (coach road 303), 8 from York, 6 from Pocklington. —Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough and Lincoln to York, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 96 miles. —Money orders issued at York: London letters deliv^d. 8.55 a.m.: post closes 4½ p.m. —The church consists of a nave, a south aisle, and chancel, with a very neat embattled tower. The Wes-

Ieyan and Primitive Methodists have chapels in the village. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of this place, says—Before the year 1153, a Benedictine nunnery was founded here, as it is said, by Alan fil Heliae de Catton, to the honour of the blessed Virgin Mary. About the time of the dissolution it had a prioress and 12 nuns, whose yearly revenues were valued at £21. 16s. 10d. as Dugdale, and £28. 8s. 8d. as Speed. The site was granted to George Gale, 7th Edward VI. Here it was that the family of the celebrated William Wilberforce, Esq., had their residence. It would appear that Mr. Wilberforce's family had, from a very remote period, been seated in Yorkshire, most probably as early as the Norman Conquest, as, during the reign of Henry II., Igerus de Wilberfoss served in the Scottish wars under Philip de Kyme, with a daughter of whose powerful house he had intermarried. The township, which is near the scene of the last conflict between Harold and Tosti the Norwegian, in which the former was the victor, and which it is believed tended to give him that blind confidence at the battle of Hastings, which lost him at the same time his crown, his country, and his life, gave its name to the family of Wilberforce. Throughout the many generations which have existed from that period, the family have always lived in the highest state of respectability, members of it being occasionally mayors of Beverley and mayors of Hull. One of its most distinguished representatives was the gentleman above spoken of, William Wilberforce, Esq., who, having spent many years in parliament, ultimately obtained the abolition of slavery, and became one of the most distinguished philanthropists of the age; he died in 1833. His body was buried in Westminster Abbey. The living (St. John the Baptist), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of the east riding and diocese of York, is valued at £12: pres. net income, £67: patron, Colonel Wyndham: pres. incumbent, Thomas Holmes, 1822: contains 2,870 acres: 116 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 586: poor rates in 1848, £173. 2s.

In the centre of the village there is an ancient cross, which rests on four steps. If Horseley be right, this was the ancient station of Vermonetum; but the antiquaries, Gale and Stukeley, say that it was that of Margidunum. In a field called "Herrings, or Black Field," there are the traces of an old town, where many Roman and other relics have been found. During the great civil war, a sharp engagement was fought here between the adherents of the king, and the parliamentarians, which is known by the name of the battle of Willoughby Field. The old fosse road bounds the village on the left, and near it there is a tumulus called Cross Hill, on the summit of which the games of the annual feast are held.---The living (St. Mary and All Saints), a disch^d. vicarage in the archd^y of Nottingham, and diocese of Lincoln, is valued at £6. 18s. 6d.: pres. net income, £87: patron, T. It wears a very cheerful appearance, and is well known from the manufacture of the carpets which bear its name, and which was introduced into England by the Earl of Pembroke, who brought workmen from France to instruct the inhabitants. There are also some small establishments for making cassimere and striped cloths. It is generally believed that the name of the place is derived from its situation on the banks of the Wily, for it is a town of great antiquity, giving the appellation which the county now bears. Somewhere about the beginning of the tenth century, Wilton became the principal seat of the diocese of Wiltshire, and continued so during the presidency of eleven bishops in succession; but afterwards the see was removed to Sherborne, and ultimately to Old Sarum, now Salisbury. During some generations after the Conquest, Wilton continued to be of much consideration. It gradually sunk into comparative insignificance, but the introduction of the manufacture of woollens gave it a great impetus, was visited by Queen Elizabeth in 1579, and was for a short time, in 1603, made the residence of the court. There were here formerly a large and important monastery and hospital, dedicated to St. John, of which Bishop Tanner says—This monastery owes its origin to Weorstan or Wulstan, the famous earl or duke of Wiltshire, who, about the year 773, repaired an old church of St. Mary here, which had been almost quite demolished by the Danes, and placed therein a college or chantry of secular priests; but after his death, A.D. 800, his relict, S. Alburga, sister to King Egbert, got leave of her brother to make it a nunnery for twelve religious virgins besides the prioress. This king encouraged this project, and is thereupon said to be the first founder of this monastery. King Ælfred, having routed the Danes not far from this town, A.D. 871, on the persuasion of his wife Ecgwine, built a new nunnery on the site of the royal palace here for an abbess and twelve religious, and caused the nuns from St. Mary to come to this new house, which consisted of twenty-six nuns, and was dedicated to St. Mary and St. Bartholomew. King Edward, senior, and King Edgar were great benefactors to this mon- astery; the latter for the sake of his natural daughter, St. Edith, a nun, and, as some say, abbess here, who was afterwards canonized, and became the patron saint of this abbey, which was of the Benedictine order, and had yearly revenues, about the time of the dissolution, valued at £601. 1s. 1d. q. as Dugd.; and £652. 11s. 5d. q. as Speed. It was granted, 35th Henry VIII., to Sir William Herbert. Some have imagined that there was a collegiate church here; but quere, whether the prebendaries here were not some few secular clergymen provided for out of the lands and churches belonging to the abbey. Near or without the gate of this town was an hospital of a master or prior and poor brethren, dedicated to St. John, as early as A.D. 1217. About the time of the dissolution there were but four poor persons in it, and the revenues of it, with the chapels of Burcomb, were valued at £16. 18s. 4d. per annum in the whole, and £14. 13s. 10d. ob. clear. It is yet in being for a master or prior, (who is a clergyman nominated by the dean of Sarum,) two poor men and two poor women, who are nominated by the master, and have each of them yearly £4. 10s. 6d. for their maintenance and firing, and are clothed every other year. There was an house of Black friars in this town, which was granted to Sir William Herbert, 1st Edward VI. The church is an ancient and venerable structure. The Wesleyans and Independents have chapels here. The free school was founded in 1706 by Mr. Walter Dyer, who endowed it with £600; it afterwards received benefactions of £1,000 from Mr. Richard Uphill, and of £1,000 from Mr. Thomas Sumption; the present income of these bequests now amounts to about £150 per annum. Mr. Thomas Mease, in 1816, bequeathed £4,000 for the benefit of the borough, desiring that the interest should accumulate for several years, and that then it should be appropriated to various charitable purposes. The other charities produce about £20 per annum. Wilton is a borough by prescription, but its privileges were guaranteed by charters from the various monarchs, from the time of Henry I. to that of Henry VI. Until within these few years there were the ruins of a castle here, but the tower having become decayed, it was taken down. The municipal boundaries for the purposes of election have been extended, so as to include the whole of the parish of Fugglestone, Britford, Barford St. Martin, Burcombe, Netherhampton, Wishford, South Newton, and Stratford-under-Castle, which comprises part of Old Sarum, Woodford, and parts of the surrounding parish. The mayor and recorder possess exclusive jurisdiction within the borough; the corporation consists of these two officers, a high steward, five aldermen, and an unlimited number of burgesses. This borough sent two members to parliament from the 23d of Edward I., until the passing of the Reform Bill, when it was restricted to one. The Wilton poor-law union comprises 22 parishes, with a population of about 11,000 persons, spread over an area of about 90 square miles. Many conflicts between the Britons and Saxons, and the Saxons and Danes, took place here. In 1747, a large portion of the town was burnt down, but it has since been rebuilt, and now consists of four good streets, containing commodious and substantial houses. It is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, and is divided into the borough, governed by two constables, and the tithing, governed by a tithingman, who are appointed by the lord of the manor. Linen and bed ticking are manufactured here, and there is a small silk trade; but the chief business consists in the sale of corn, cattle, butter, and cheese. The church is a large building. The Independents and Baptists have places of worship here. An Augustine priory formerly existed at Stavordale in this parish. — The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Wells, and diocese of Bath and Wells, is valued at £31: pres. net income, £135: patrons, U. and G. Rail. through Swindon and Stonehouse to Cleve station, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham to Cleve, &c., 87 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 8 p.m. —This town is situated at the foot of the northern side of the range of the Cotswold hills, in a pleasant valley, watered by the river Islip. There are three principal streets, intersected by a few smaller ones. In 787, a monastery was founded here by Offa, and an abbey by Cenulph in 798. At the dissolution, it had a revenue of £759. 11s. 9d. Very few remains of it now exist. The town is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates. The church, which is an elegant edifice, consisting of a nave, aisles, and chancel, and a lofty embattled quadrangular tower crowned with pinnacles, contains an ancient carved oak screen. This building was founded in the reign of Henry VI., by William, abbot of Winchcombe. In the neighbourhood there are some large paper-mills. There are places of worship here for the Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists. A free grammar-school, founded by Henry VIII. in 1522, has now an endowment of £49. 4s. 6d., and provides instruction for thirty-four boys. Lady Francis Chandos, in 1672, founded another school, which she endowed with land producing £40 per annum. Another school is endowed with £20 per annum. —The living (St. Peter), a vicarage, with the curacy of Gretton, is valued at £18: pres. net income, £134: patron, Lord Sudeley: pres. incumbent, J. R. Harvey, 1834: contains 539 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 2,613: do. in 1851, 3,005: ass^d. prop^r. £5,700: poor rates in 1848, £878. 8s. Tithes commuted in 1812. —Market day, Saturday. Fairs: last Saturday in March, May 6, and July 28.

WINCHELSEA, Sussex, formerly a market town and parish in the hun^d. of Guestling, union of Rye, rape of Hastings, having separate jurisdiction: 85 miles from London (coach road 64), 3 from Rye, 7 from Hastings. —Sou. West. Rail. through Ashford to Winchelsea station: from Derby, through London, &c., 217 miles. —Money orders issued at Rye: London letters deliv^d. 8 a.m.: post closes 5.55 p.m. —This town, which probably derives its name from Wincheling, the son of Cissa, who founded the south Saxon kingdom, is situated about half a mile from the Camber Point, where stood the ancient town, which, about the close of the thirteenth century, was destroyed by an inundation of the sea. William the Conqueror landed there in 1067, and Henry II. in 1188. In 1266, Prince Edward stormed the town, and defeated young Simon de Montfort. Edward I. granted the inhabitants a site for a new town, and soon afterwards the old place was swallowed up. Winchelsea was made a cinque port, prior to the reign of John. It is a member of Hastings. The town is divided into squares, by streets intersecting each other at right angles. It is about two miles in circumference. The church consists of the remains of a very fine structure, and contains several splendid old monuments. Winchelsea is a borough by prescription, governed by a mayor and jurats, who hold courts of general session and of gaol delivery, and have jurisdiction over capital offences. It once returned two members to parliament, but was attached to the borough of Rye by the Reform Bill. There is a place of worship for the Wesleyan Methodists. Robert, Archbishop of Canterbury, who died in 1313, was born in this town. Winchelsea gives the title of earl to the Finch family. —The living (St. Thomas), a rectory in the archd^y. of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £6. 13s. 4d.: pres. net income, £278: patron, Trustees of Sir W. Ashburnham: pres. incumbent, J. J. West, 1831: contains 1,120 acres: 143 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 687: ass^d. prop^r. £2,330: poor rates in 1848, £202. 15s.

WINCHESTER, HAMPSHIRE, an ancient and peculiarly constituted city, once the metropolis of England, nearly in the centre of Hampshire: 67 miles from London (coach road 64), 12 from Southampton, 18 from Basingstoke. —Sou. West. Rail. to Winchester: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Winchester, 155 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 2½ p.m.: post closes 8.40 a.m. and 10 p.m. —This ancient and interesting city—called Cæsar Guent, the white city, from the whiteness of the chalky soil, by the Britons; Venta Belgarum, by the Romans; and Wintancester, by the Saxons—is delightfully situated on the eastern side of an eminence rising gradually from the river Itchen, which is navigable to Southampton. Winchester is supposed to have been founded by King Ludor Rons Hudibras, who brought a tribe of Celtic Britons here from the coasts of Armorica, in Gaul, as early as 892 years before Christ. A tribe of the Belgæ subsequently settled here, driving out the original inhabitants. The Romans made this place one of their principal stations. On the departure of the Romans, Winchester became the capital of South Britain, and afterwards of Wessex, and of the Heptarchy. Cenwahl, king of Wessex, completed the cathedral, which had been commenced by his father in 648, on his conversion to Christianity by St. Birinus. In this cathedral Egbert was crowned king of England in 827, in the presence of a wittenagemote. The city was afterwards much injured by the Danes in their various incursions, especially in the year 872. Alfred, after his victory over them, resided here. The original standard measure fixed by Edgar for the use of the entire kingdom, is still preserved in the Guildhall. Canute made Winchester the seat of his government, and for many years it continued to be the residence of the monarchs of the realm. Nearly one-half the city was destroyed by the hostilities that took place between Stephen and the Empress Matilda, as for some weeks there were continual conflicts in its very centre. Matilda was at last obliged to escape from the castle in a coffin; but the treaty between Stephen and Henry was ratified at Winchester, and it subsequently became the scene of many warlike operations. In 1552, Henry VIII. entertained the emperor Charles V. for several days, and caused the celebrated 'round table,' said to have been that of King Arthur and his knights, to be repaired. James I. was proclaimed here by the high sheriff of the county, Sir B. Tichborne, immediately on the death of Elizabeth, and before the privy council had fixed on her successor. Sir Walter Raleigh, with Lords Cobham and Grey de Wilton, and others, were tried here for conspiracy. Charles I. levied £150 on Winchester as ship-money. During the parliamentary war, great devastations were committed on Winchester, which, after the battle of Naseby, held out for a week against Cromwell. The royal and episcopal castles were then destroyed, and the fortifications were dismantled. Charles II. commenced the erection of a magnificent palace, but it was never finished, and has recently been converted into a military barracks. The city of Winchester now consists of one spacious and handsome street, intersected by others at right angles. It is well paved, lighted with gas, and has an ample supply of good water. The river is crossed by a neat stone bridge. In the centre of the High Street there is a beautiful ancient stone cross, forty-three feet high. Most of the houses are well built and substantial. The ancient walls round the city had four gates, of which one only, the west gate, now remains. The principal, and most ancient and interesting, monument in this city, is undoubtedly the cathedral, which was commenced in 646, at the same time that it was made the seat of a diocese. Ethelwold, in the time of King Edgar, placed Benedictine monks in the establishment, which continued to increase in opulence until the dissolution, when its revenues amounted to £1,507. 17s. 2d. Henry VIII. refounded it for a bishop, dean, chancellor, and other dignitaries and officers. The cathedral stands in an open space, near the centre of the city. It was dedicated, in the time of Henry VIII., to the Holy and Undivided Trinity. It is a magnificent cruciform building, of great extent, being 545 feet long from east to west; the transepts are 186 feet long; the breadth is 87, and the height 76 feet. The most ancient part of the present structure was built by Bishop Walkelyn in 1093, when the corpse of St. Swithin was removed into it. This removal being delayed by violent rains, was the occasion of the adage, that rain on St. Swithin's day, July 15th, is always followed by forty days' successive rain. The beautiful west front was erected by William of Wykeham. The interior is very imposing, from its grandeur, its exquisite beauty, and fine proportions, as well as from the many interesting associations connected with it. The long range of massive circular columns that separate the nave from the aisle, are cased with clustered pillars, and between some of them are various chantry and sepulchral chapels. Those portions of the structure which were erected by Bishop Fox, are considered to be the finest specimen of the Gothic style of the sixteenth century that exists in England, the western window being particularly grand and imposing. The chantry of William de Wykeham is a beautiful monument, containing the effigies of the bishop in white marble, dressed in full costume. The principal chapels, besides the above, are those of Bishop Fox, Cardinal Beaufort, and Bishop Waynflete. Near the communion-table is a slab of dark grey marble, covering the tomb of William Rufus, and on each side, above the choir, are the remains of several Saxon kings and princes. The altar is ornamented by West's picture of 'Christ raising Lazarus from the dead,' and behind the altar there is a superb stone screen, erected by Cardinal Beaufort. Winchester college, founded by William of Wykeham, is the oldest institution of its class in England, and served as a model for the schools of Eton and Westminster. It was instituted about the year 1387, for a warden, ten fellows or perpetual chaplains, and seventy scholars, besides other officers. At the dissolution, it had endowments to the amount of £639. 8s. 7d. per annum. The same rules are observed at this academy as at Oxford, for which university it is a kind of training school. Besides the scholars, a certain number of young men are admitted to the school as 'commoners.' The premises are spacious, elegant, and commodious, and are pleasantly situated. The hospital of St. Cross, in the village of that name, near the city, was founded and endowed in 1132, by Henry de Blois, bishop of Winchester, brother of King Stephen. The thirteen brethren, who are still maintained, wear black cloaks, with a silver cross on the left breast. The buildings, which are very commodious, consist of an outer and inner court, and above the building, between the two, is a beautiful lofty tower, ornamented with a statue of Cardinal Beaufort. The church is a cruciform structure, erected partly by Henry de Blois and partly by William of Wykeham, but contains specimens of a number of architectural styles, from the many alterations it has undergone. Winchester contains a handsome guildhall, built in 1711, a market-house, a theatre, assembly rooms, a county gaol, a county house of correction, and a county hospital. Near the west gate is a stone obelisk, erected in commemoration of a dreadful plague which ravaged the city in 1666. The church of St. Maurice consists of the ancient chapel of a priory. Henry I. and several of his successors granted charters to the city. The Reform Act vested the government of the city in the town council, which consists of six aldermen, eighteen councillors, and a mayor. A commission of the peace has been granted, and a court of quarter sessions appointed. The city returns two members to parliament. Sacks are manufactured here, but not to any great extent. There are places of worship here for the Baptists, Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics. Opposite the latter is a Benedictine nunnery. In the twelfth century this city contained three royal monasteries, besides a large number of smaller religious houses, and forty parish churches. At the dissolution, the abbey of Hyde possessed revenues amounting to £865. 18s. per annum, and the priory of St. Swithin's had £1,507. 17s. 2d. per annum. The charities are numerous and important. The Winchester poor-law union comprises 33 parishes, extending over 92 square miles, with a population of about 20,000 persons. Wolvesey Castle, built in 1138, by Henry de Blois, as an episcopal residence, was situated on a branch of the river, near the cathedral. It was destroyed in the parliamentary war, and its picturesque ruins now alone remain. The chapel, a fine and curious old building, containing the famous 'round table,' is now used as the county hall. The north-east tower still exists. The most distinguished natives of this place are—Henry III.; Eleanor, daughter of Edward I.; and Prince Arthur, son of Henry VIII. The illustrious family of Paulet takes its title of marquis from Winchester. Contains 858 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 10,732: ass^d. prop^r. £17,732. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. WINDER (Low), WESTMORELAND, a township in the parish of Barton—(which see for access, &c.)—West ward: 285 miles from London, 4 from Penrith, 1 from Barton. Popⁿ. in 1841, 16. Tithes commuted in 1839.

WINDERMERE, WESTMORELAND, a parish in the ward and union of Kendal: it comprises the chapelry of Troutbeck, and the townships of Applethwaite and Under-Milbeck: 260 miles from London (coach road 271), 9 from Kendal, 3 from Ambleside. Nor. West. Rail. through Crewe, Preston, Lancaster, and Kendal, to Windermere station: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 160 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7.40 a.m.: post closes 5.5 p.m. This parish was anciently part of the parish of Kendal. The ancient church has a large and curious old window of stained glass, once belonging to the abbey of Furness. The large lake, called Windermere, is in the Applethwaite division of this parish. All the islands are in this parish. "Windermere, or more correctly Winandermere," says Baines, "is nearly eleven miles in length, and has an average breadth of three quarters of a mile. The lake runs north and south, with a very slight curve near the centre. The middle and lower parts of the lake lie between bold and steep hills; that on the west, called Furness-fell, is clothed in woods of larch and fir; that on the east rises with a rugged surface into crags and heath-covered fells. The lake contracts towards its foot, where its undulating shores are adorned with forest trees. Towards the head, the hills recede, leaving a broad margin of woods, meadows, and lawns, beautifully spread over a waving surface, and affording the most delightful situations for gentlemen's seats. The lake is a mile in width in the upper part, and presents a very fine expanse of water. Around the head stand lofty mountains, which combine gracefulness with boldness of form. Windermere contains fourteen islands, most of them forming a cluster near the middle. Both the shores are highly cultivated, and adorned at intervals with handsome mansions, which heighten the natural beauty of the scenery, and contribute to give to the queen of English lakes a character of unequalled richness and elegance." The fourteen islands of Windermere are called holms, the largest of which is Belle Isle, which runs obliquely across the centre of the lake, opposite Bowness. It contains 28 acres, and was beautifully laid out in groves, lawns, and walks, by the late John C. Curwen, Esq. The lake abounds in trout, perch, pike, and char, the last being a rare and delicate fish, found only in the deepest of the lakes. The whole of the western shore of Windermere, and nearly half of the eastern, are in Lancashire, but the lake is considered to belong to Westmoreland. There is a ferry over the lake, a mile below Bowness. Windermere discharges its waters by the Leven river, which flows from the southern end of the lake, into the deep inlet called Leven Sands. —The living (St. Martin), a rectory in the archd^y of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, is valued at £24. 6s. 8d.: pres. net income, £253: patrons, Lady Le Fleming and others: pres. incumbent, Sir R. WINDSOR (NEW), BERKSHIRE, a borough, market town, and parish, in the hun^d. of Ripplesmeere, and north-east corner of Berkshire: it is pleasantly situated on the banks of the Thames: 21 miles from London (coach road 22), 15 from Henley, 19 from Reading. —Gt. West. Rail. through Slough to Windsor station: from Derby, through London, &c., 153 miles. —Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 12 noon: post closes 11½ a.m. and 10 p.m. —This place owes its origin to Windleshora, the Saxon name of a more ancient town, about two miles distant from the present one, and in which stood a Saxon palace. Edward the Confessor granted it with all its appendages, including a fortress at the present town, to the abbey of St. Peter at Westminster, from whom William the Conqueror obtained it, strengthened and enlarged the fortress, and made it his occasional residence. He also laid out extensive parks, and otherwise improved it. Henry I. further enlarged and converted it into a royal palace. In Stephen's reign, it was considered the second fortress in the kingdom. The successive monarchs who reigned over England continued to reside and make improvements in the building. Edward III. commenced the erection of the castle on the present plan, the execution of it being intrusted to William of Wykeham, and artificers forcibly impressed to contribute to the work. This king also built the chapel and magnificent hall of St. George. In his reign, two sovereigns, John, king of France, and David, king of Scotland, were prisoners there at the same time. Edward IV. rebuilt St. George's chapel; Henry VII., Henry VIII., and Elizabeth, further improved the building. The castle was garrisoned by the parliament during the parliamentary war. Charles II. made several additions to it, particularly enlarging the terrace, and thus forming one of the finest promenades in the world. In the reigns of George III. and George IV., the castle was thoroughly repaired and restored, and it now constitutes one of the most splendid royal palaces and fortresses in Europe. This superb structure, which now occupies more than twelve acres of ground, is situated on the summit of a hill, sloping gradually to the plain on three of its sides, the Thames sweeping round its base. In the centre of the mass of buildings, rises the immense Round Tower, noted for the views of magnificent scenery commanded from it. The castle is divided into the upper and lower wards, the latter of which is the most extensive. It is entered by Henry VIII.'s gateway, which is flanked by two towers, besides which, this ward contains six other towers. St. George's chapel extends across it from east to west. At the east is the royal tomb-house, built by Henry VII. In the reign of George III., a large excavation, 15 feet deep, was made beneath it, and fitted up for the reception of the remains of the sovereigns of England. George III., George IV., the Duke of York, and several members of the royal family, have been buried here. There is a deanery here, and several cloisters, for the residence of the canons and lay clerks of the chapel. The residences of the military knights are also situated here. St. George's chapel, as it at present exists, was chiefly erected by Henry VII. It is a most beautiful and finely proportioned edifice, full of interesting monuments, and is erected in the purest style of pointed architecture. The roof, which is richly decorated, is supported on clustered columns, which spread out like trees on each side. The great west window has been recently renovated. It is full of beautiful stained glass, painted with the arms of the founders of the chapel. The choir is used for the installation of knights, and for divine service. The floor is paved with black and white marble. Under the organ gallery are the stalls of the sovereign, and of the princes of the blood-royal; those of the knights are on the sides of the choir. The Queen's closet is a gallery used by her Majesty when attending Divine worship. The window above the altar, representing the Resurrection, was designed by Benjamin West. In this chapel are the remains of Henry VI., Edward IV., Henry VIII., Lady Jane Seymour, and an infant daughter of Queen Anne. There is also a large monument to the memory of the Princess Charlotte. On the summit of a lofty artificial mound, between the two wards, stands the Round Tower, which is 302½ feet in circumference. The top of the flag pole is 295½ feet above the level of the Little park. On ascending 100 steps, which are commanded by a piece of ordnance, the entrance gateway is reached. Within it are the principal apartments, and round it is a curtain battery, mounted with seventeen pieces of cannon. From the battlements there are prospects over no less than twelve counties. This tower is now the residence of the governor and the lieutenant-governor of the fortress, and contains an armoury, but it was formerly a state prison. The upper ward chiefly consists of a spacious court, called the Great Quadrangle. On the west of it is the Round Tower, the state apartments are on the north, and the Queen's private apartments, with those of the royal household, are on the south. Each of these have several entrances, some of which, particularly the Queen's private entrance, are very beautiful. The entire quadrangle being built in the domestic English style, and battlemented and ornamented with so many handsome towers and entrance gateways, has a very imposing effect. The terrace, laid out by Charles II., extends round the exterior of the south and east points. The state apartments comprise the Vandyke room, or Queen's ball-room, the Queen's drawing-room, the Elizabethan gallery, the Blenheim closet, the state print-room, the Queen's closet, richly decorated, the King's closet, the King's council-room, the King's drawing-room, with a richly ornamented ceiling, the state ante-room, the vestibule, the throne-room, with a richly decorated ceiling, and walls of polished oak, beautifully carved, the west end, on which the throne is placed, being raised by a dais; the ball-room, 90 feet long, 34 broad, and 33 high, is highly embellished in the Louis XIV. style; the Waterloo chamber, St. George's hall, one of the most magnificent apartments in the world, 200 feet long, 34 broad, and 32 high, is elegantly fitted up; the guard chamber, with a curious collection of armour, the Queen's presence chamber, and the Queen's audience chamber. All these apartments are enriched with paintings by all the celebrated masters whose works are in existence. There are other rooms besides the above, which are the private apartments of her majesty. One room and a closet attached to it contains the plate, which has been valued at £1,700,000, and comprises several rare and curious objects. Near the castle is the extensive riding-school. The Little park is four miles in circumference, and is most beautifully laid out. Within it is an extensive garden for the use of the Queen and her court. About a mile from the castle is Frogmore lodge. The Long walk is a noble and quite straight avenue, three miles long, bordered by a double row of elms. At its extremity, and mounted upon a mass of stones, there is a colossal equestrian statue of George III. by Westmacott. The Great park comprises about 1,800 acres, and presents every species of beauty to be desired in a park. It contains several lodges: to the west is Windsor forest, which was originally 120 miles in circumference. To the east of Cumberland lodge is situated the artificial lake called Virginia water, so justly celebrated, with the grounds attached to it, for its extreme picturesqueness. Its various attractions are far too numerous for description. It has islands, cascades, bridges, hermitages, ruins, cottages, and plantations, all disposed so as to display their various beauties to the utmost advantage. The town of Windsor consists of several irregularly built streets, well paved and lighted with gas, containing many neat brick houses. The church is a spacious modern edifice, containing some beautiful carved work by Gibbons. Bachelor's-acre is a meadow appropriated to the sports of the inhabitants, and on which there is an obelisk in commemoration of an entertainment given there by George III. to the poorer classes. There is a fine bridge over the Thames, connecting the town with Eton. Beside these, the public buildings are the town-hall, jail, a theatre, and extensive cavalry and infantry barracks. Edward I. granted the first charter to this borough. It is now governed by a high steward, a recorder, six aldermen, eighteen councillors, a town-clerk, a treasurer, and other officers. A commission of the peace has been granted, and a court of quarter sessions appointed. It returns two members to parliament. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Baptists, have places of worship here. A school, erected under the patronage of Queen Anne, educates and clothes thirty-six boys and thirty girls, at a cost of £250 per annum. Another school educates and maintains twenty girls. There is also an hospital for twelve poor persons, besides some almshouses, a loan fund, and various smaller benefactions. Among the illustrious natives of this town, were John, Eleanor, Margaret, and Mary, children of Edward I.; Edward III., born in 1312; and Henry VI. Windsor gives the title of earl to the family of Stuart, Marquises of Bute. The living (St. John the Baptist) is valued at £15. 3s. 4d.: contains 8,170 acres: 1,100 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 7,528: do. in 1851, 8,657: ass^d. prop^r. £14,938. Market day, Saturday. miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 4 p.m.: post closes 6 p.m. and 8 a.m. This ancient town is supposed to derive its name from the river Ouse, formerly the Wise, and the Saxon bec, a tongue of land between two rivers. It is pleasantly situated upon the river Nene, which is here crossed by an elliptical bridge. The church of St. Mary's stands about two miles north-west of the town, and is a plain but pleasing structure in the early English style of architecture: it contains several handsome streets and well-built houses, most of which have recently been erected. The streets are well paved, lighted with gas, and amply supplied with water. On the site of an old castle, which Queen Elizabeth used as a state prison, the ground is now occupied by a handsome circus of houses. The church of St. Peter is a fine structure. Wisbeach, which contains a town-hall, a theatre, and assembly rooms, was incorporated by Edward II., who restored the Guild of the Holy Trinity, which had been founded in 1379. Under the New Municipal Act, the borough is divided into two wards, governed by six aldermen and eighteen councillors. A commission of the peace has been granted. The sessions are held at Wisbeach and Ely alternately; the assizes for the Isle being held twice a year. The manufactures are chiefly of cordage and iron; but malt is made largely in the town and neighbourhood. Large quantities of corn and other cereals are, however, exported; the imports consist mostly of deals and coals. A custom-house was erected in 1804. There are places of worship for the Baptists, Independents, Society of Friends, Presbyterians, Wesleyan Methodists, Johnsonians, and Unitarians. The endowed grammar-school, founded in the 14th century, by the Guild of the Holy Trinity, has four fellowships and six scholarships attached to it. There are six almshouses here. The Wisbeach poor-law union comprises 22 parishes, extending over 184 square miles, with a population of about 40,000. The poor-law commissioners have erected a work-house, with accommodation for 400 persons. This was the birth-place of the celebrated William Godwin the writer. He was born in 1756, and was the son of a dissenting minister. The navigation of the port is through a canal which joins the river to the old Nene at Outwall, at the commencement of Well Creek, which joins it with the river Ouse. The living (St. Peter and St. Paul), a vicarage, with the curacy of St. Mary attached, in the archd^y and diocese of New Chapel and Gyhirn, are perpetual curacies; the former of the two last having an income attached of £200 a year, and the latter of £80: St. Mary's contains 9,800 acres: 302 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,931: ass^d prop^r £9,981: poor rates in 1848, £818: St. Peter's contains 6,450 acres: 1,633 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 8,530: ass^d prop^r £28,333: poor rates in 1848, £3,730. Attached to the church, on the north-eastern side, there is a private chapel belonging to the ancient family of the Sackvilles, and which, for many centuries, has been their place of burial. The interior of the church contains three monuments by Nollekins, Flaxman, and Chantrey, which are well worthy of notice. Not far from the church there is a tower and some other remains of the ancient mansion of Buckhurst. The first Lord Buckhurst was high treasurer to Queen Elizabeth, and was afterwards created Earl of Dorset. That title has now become extinct. —The living (St. Michael), a rectory, with the curacy of St. John's, in the archd^y of Lewes, and diocese of Chichester, is valued at £25. 5s. 5d.: pres. net income, £717: patron, Earl Delawarr: pres. incumbent, Hon. His lordship, who assumed the surname of Sackville before West, and the arms of that family in 1843, is descended from John-la-Warr, who had a grant, in the 8th year of John's reign, of the lordship of Bristolton in Gloucestershire. His son Jordan-la-Warr was alternately on the side of the king and the barons, but subsequently made his peace with the sovereign after the battle of Evesham. The grandson of that knight having rendered great military service during the French and Scottish wars, was summoned to parliament as a baron in 1299. From him was descended Thomas-la-Warr, the fifth baron, who being a priest and rector of the church of Manchester in the 9th year of Henry V., caused it to be made collegiate. His estates devolved upon his half-sister's son, Sir Reginald West, the member of a family whose founder was Sir Thomas West, Knt., who lived in the reign of Edward II., and was a great favourite of that sovereign and his son, and was summoned to parliament as Baron West in February, 1342. He was engaged in the French wars of Edward III., as did also his successors, until the time of Henry V. In the reign of Henry VI., Sir Reginald West, the fifth baron, succeeded to the estates of the Thomas Lord-la-Warr spoken of above, who, being a priest, had no descendants, and was accordingly seized of his mother's inheritance, and was summoned to parliament as Lord Delawarr. From that nobleman was descended John, the seventh lord, a distinguished general, who was made a K.B., and, in 1761, was elevated to the dignity of an earldom. Of him the present peer is a direct descendant. —Highfield Park is the seat of Richard Price, Esq.; and the Rectory, of the Hon. and Rev. Reginald Windsor Sackville, the rector.

It was formerly a royal borough, and from the 5th year of Edward II.'s reign, until the 33d of Edward III., sent two members to parliament. Witney, which is situated on the banks of the Windrush, over which there is here a bridge of three arches, consists chiefly of two streets, built with considerable regularity, and containing many handsome houses; its neighbourhood abounds in agreeable scenery. The distinguishing characteristic of the place is its superiority in the manufacture of blankets and other similar woollen articles, which are here produced of a quality that cannot be obtained in any other part of England, and for which it has long been celebrated. The peculiarity of the blankets is attributed to the waters of the Windrush, which are so impregnated with salt and other detergent substances, that the textiles are, in fact, washed without there being anything like manipulation employed in the process. The church is a spacious uniform structure, showing a combination of the early and decorated styles of a very interesting character. The Independents, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, and the Society of Friends, have chapels here. The parish is rich in almshouses; beside which there are benefactions which produce upwards of £440 per annum. The Witney poor-law union comprises 42 parishes, with a population of about 22,200 persons, spread over an area of 108 square miles.---The living (St. Mary) is a vicarage and rectory, in the archd^y and diocese of Oxford: the vicarage is valued at £19s. 2d.: the rectory at £47. 9s. 4½d.: pres. net income, £1,290: patron, Bishop of Winchester: pres. incumbent, Charles Jerram, 1834: contains 7,450 acres: 998 houses:

Tithes commuted in 1839.

Witton House, the seat of Lord Wodehouse, is a modernly-built imposing mansion, standing in the midst of a beautiful park and pleasure-grounds, and commanding several fine views of the German Ocean. His lordship derives his descent from a family flourishing in a very remote period of English history, one of them having received the honour of knighthood in the time of Henry I., and another, John Wodehouse, having greatly distinguished himself in the battle of Agincourt, in 1415, was gifted, as a reward for his valour, with the arms, motto, and supporters now borne by his descendants. From him was descended, through a long line of distinguished ancestors, many of whom were knighted, and represented their native county in parliament, Sir John Wodehouse, Bart., who was elevated to the peerage in 1797, and of that nobleman the present peer is the grandson.

WITTON (EAST), NORTH RIDING, YORK, a parish in the western division of the wapentake of Hang, union of Leyburn: 254 miles from London (coach road 230), 2 from Middleham, 7 from Masham. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, York, and Northallerton, to Bedale, thence 8 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 122 miles. Money orders issued at Middleham: London letters deliv^d 11½ a.m.: post closes 1 p.m. It is in this parish that the remains of Jerveaux Abbey exist; it was one of the most magnificent monuments in the country, and at the general dissolution its revenues, which were granted to Matthew, Earl of Lennox, in the 36th year of Henry VIII.'s reign, were valued at £455. 10s. 10d. In 1805-6, the late Earl of Aylesbury caused the whole of the remains of the structure to be explored, that portion visible being overgrown to a great degree with briars and other hedgerow shrubbery. At that time the abbey church, the choir, with the high altar, were laid bare, together with the transepts, several tombs, the abbot's house and several kitchens, and the chapter-house. The parochial charities produce about £16 per annum. — The living (St. Ella), a vicarage in the diocese of Ripon, is valued at £5. 3s. 6d.: pres. net income, £93: patron, Marquis of Aylesbury: pres. incumbent, Wm. West. Rail. through Bristol to Wellington, thence 3 miles: from Derby, through Birmingham, Bristol, &c., 187 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. — Wiveliscombe stands on a low elevation in the midst of a valley, surrounded by ranges of hills, well watered, but interrupted by numerous sudden declivities, that might almost be called ravines. The town consists of several streets, in which there are many handsome modern residences, but others which can boast of picturesque antiquity. The church, which has within these few years been rebuilt, is in the early style of English architecture. Wiveliscombe is governed by a bailiff and portreeve, but they have no municipal jurisdiction, and the magistrates of the county accordingly direct its affairs. One part of the town, which is called the borough, anciently sent members to parliament, but the inhabitants were, upon petition, relieved from that burden. Blanket-weaving is the principal trade of the place, so far as manufactures go; but it is also a great mart for corn, cattle, and other agricultural produce. In the neighbourhood there are traces of two Roman encampments. — The living (St.

Andrew), a vicarage in the diocese of Bath and Wells, is valued at £27: pres. net income, £300: patron, the Prebendary thereof: pres. incumbent, R. A. Court Beadon, 1837: contains 5,310 acres: 603 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,984: do. in 1851, 3,432: ass^d. prop^r. £11,615: poor rates in 1848, £1,512. 6s. Tithes commuted in 1840. WIVENHOE, ESSEX, a parish in the Colchester division of the hund^d of Lexden, union of Lexden and Winstree, on the river Colne: 56 miles from London (coach road 52), 5 from Colchester, 9 from Manningtree. East. Co^a Rail. to Colchester, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 188 miles. Money orders issued at Colchester: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. This place is considered to be the port of Colchester, and a plan was formed for constructing a ship canal to Hythe, but it was abandoned. The quay is admirably planned; and from beside it vast numbers of oysters, during the season, are daily shipped to London. The custom-house is subordinate to that of Colchester. The living (St. Mary), a rectory in the diocese of Rochester, is valued at £10: pres. net income, £371: patron, N. C. Corsellis, Esq.: pres. incumbent, E. T. Waters, 1846: contains 1,840 acres: 197 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,599: do. in 1851, 1,839: ass^d. prop^r. £3,299: poor rates in 1848, £490. Fair, September 4, for toys. Wivenhoe Park, a fine domain, skirted by the river Colne, is the seat of General Gordon Rebow, a magistrate and deputy-lieutenant of the county. In the mansion, a fine Elizabethan structure, there is the admirable specimen of wood-carving by Grindley Gibbons, which first brought him into notice. Wivenhoe Hall is the seat of Stephen Brown, Esq.; and the Lodge, of Henry Ashford, Esq.

WIX (or WEEKS), ESSEX, a parish in the hund^d and union of Tendring: 64 miles from London, 5 from Manningtree. East. Co^a Rail. to Manningtree station, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 196 miles. Money orders issued at Manningtree: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 7 p.m. One of the schools here is endowed with £5 a year; the other charities produce about £10 per annum. There was formerly a Benedictine monastery here, the revenues of which at the dissolution produced £92. 12s. 3d. They were granted to Cardinal Wolsey for his projected college. The living (St. Mary) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Rochester: pres. net income, £160: patron, Rev. George Wilkins: pres. incumbent, George Wilkins, 1837: contains 2,850 acres: 112 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 808: ass^d. prop^r. £5,208: poor rates in 1848, £467.

WOBURN (or OLD WOBURN), BEDFORD, a parish and market town in the hund^d of Manshead, union of Woburn: 50 miles from London (coach road 41), 7 from Amptill, 9 from Dunstable. Nor. West. Rail. to Bletchley, thence 3 miles; from Derby, through Rugby to Bletchley, &c., 82 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 2 p.m.: post closes 10.20 a.m. and 7 p.m. The church was erected by Robert Hobbs, the last abbot of Woburn, and is a singular structure, covered with ivy; and having undergone great improvements from the designs, and under the superintendence, of Mr. Blore, the architect, now presents a very imposing appearance. The tower was built, and the improvements were made, at the sole expense of the Duke of Bedford. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Independents have places of worship here. The charities are numerous and valuable. The market-house, which was also designed by Mr. Blore, is a curious structure, having a fine archway entrance, over which there is an oriel window. The commissioners have built a workhouse here, which is capable of accommodating 300 persons. The Woburn poor-law union comprises 16 parishes, with a population of about 11,000 persons, spread over an area of about 44 square miles. The living (St. Mary) is a perpetual curacy, exempt: pres. net income, £251: patron, Duke of Bedford: pres. incumbent, H. M. Erskine, 1848: contains 3,200 acres: 305 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,914: do. in 1851, 2,201: ass^d. prop^r. £7,320: poor rates in 1848, £373. 16s. Market day, Friday. Fairs: January 1, March 25, July 13, and October 6. Close in the neighbourhood is Woburn Abbey, the magnificent seat of the Duke of Bedford, surrounded by an ample park and beautiful pleasure-grounds. The mansion, a stately structure, most munificently furnished, is erected on the site of the ancient abbey, of which Tanner says—Near this place Hugh de Bolbec, A.D. 1145, built an abbey for Cistercian monks, to the honour of the Blessed Virgin Mary. The whole income of this monastery was certified, 26th Henry VIII., to be £391. 18s. 2d., according to Dugdale, or £431. 13s. 11d., according to Mr. Speed. The site, with great part of the lands, was granted, 1st Edward VI., to Lord John Russell. The present mansion is full of the finest works of art, and is replete with everything that could be required by the most recherché taste. To enter into anything like an analysis of the chronicles of the illustrious family whose head is now the lord of Woburn, would be doing nothing, either more or less, than writing a history of England, for so prominent have been its several members throughout a series of centuries—and not less so than at the present moment—that you cannot separate the one from the other. There is not a single reign during the last six hundred years, in which a Russell has not, in one way or another, been a great man. To give a detailed history, therefore, of the family, would be far beyond our length, and we must consequently be content with observing, that although it was very ancient, the title of Duke of Bedford fell into abeyance, but was revived in the family of Sir Ralph Russell, Knt., who was constable of Corfe Castle in 1221, and married Isabel, a daughter of Lord Newmarsh. From him was descended John Russell, said to have been one of the most accomplished gentlemen of his time, and who, residing here at that time (1506), was the instrument partly in destroying the unpleasant feelings of Philip, Archduke of Austria, and husband of Johanna, daughter of Ferdinand and Isabella of Castile, who, in their voyage from Flanders to Spain, had been obliged to put into Weymouth. He was induced to accompany them to Windsor, and was shortly afterwards created Baron Russell of Cheyney, in the county of Buckingham. In 1540, when the great monasteries were dissolved, his lordship obtained a grant of the abbey of Tavistock, in Devonshire, with its extensive possessions. During the reign of Edward VI., his lordship received a grant of the abbey of Woburn, also with its dependencies, and, in 1550, was created Earl of Bedford. William, the fifth earl, carried St. Edward's sceptre at the coronation of Charles II., and was, in 1690, created Marquis of Tavistock and Duke of Bedford. Of that nobleman the present duke is a direct descendant. The eminent statesman and orator, Lord John Russell, who has filled almost every superior position in the state, and all with honour and distinction, is his brother.

WOBURN or WOBBURN (WEST, or BISHOP'S), BUCKINGHAM, a parish, formerly a market town, in the hun^d of Desborough, union of Wycombe: 27 miles from London (coach road 26), 3 from Beaconsfield, 4 from Great Marlow. — Gt. West. Rail. to Maidenhead, thence 5 miles: from Derby, through London, &c., 159 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 8 a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. — The town stands in a pleasant little valley on the borders of the river Wycombe, on which there are several corn and paper mills. The church is a spacious ancient structure, and contains several interesting monuments. The Independents and Primitive Methodists have chapels here. The parochial charities produce about £40 per annum. — The living, a vicarage in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £12: pres. net income, £138: patron, James Dupré, Esq.: pres. incumbent, F. B. Ashley, 1848: contains 2,850 acres: 305 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,830: do. in 1851, 2,105: ass^d. prop^r. £4,923.

WODENSBURY. See WEDNESBURY.

WOKEFIELD, BERKS, a titling in the parish of Stratfield-Mortimer—(which see for access, &c.) —hun^d of Theale, union of Bradfield: 46 miles from London, 1 from Stratfield-Mortimer, 7 from Reading. — Contains 600 acres: 26 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 835.

WOKING, SURREY, a parish, and formerly a market town, in the hun^d of the same name, union of Guildford, on the river Wey, and intersected by the Basingstoke Canal: the parish is divided into the titlings of Townstreet, Goldsworth, Heathside, Kingfield, Mayford, Shackelford, Hale-End, Crastock, and Sutton, all of which, Crastock and Sutton excepted, are in the manor of Woking: 25 miles from London, 3 from Ripley, 6 from Guildford. — Sou. West. Rail. to Woking station: from Derby, through London, &c., 157 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 6 p.m. — The church is in the mixed style of English architecture, and contains some remnants of ancient stained glass. The Independents have a chapel in the village. There was formerly a market here on every Thursday, but it has long been discontinued. — The living (St. Peter), a vicarage in the archd^y of Surrey, and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £11. 0s. 5d.: pres. net income, £234: patron, Earl of Onslow: pres. incumbent, C. B. Bowles, 1837: contains 8,190 acres: 347 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 2,482: do. in 1851, 2,854: ass^d. prop^r. £9,766: poor rates in 1848, £1,038. 4s. The tithes (vicarial and small) and rates were commuted in 1841. — Fair, Whit-Tuesday, for toys.

WOKINGHAM (or OAKINGHAM) WILTS, a parish and a corporate market town, partly in the hun^d of Sonning, county of Berks, and partly in the hun^d of Amesbury, union of Wokingham, in the above county: 42 miles from London (coach road 31), 7 from Reading, 12 from Windsor. — Gt. West. Rail. through Reading to Wokingham station: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Wokingham, &c., 129 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7½ a.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. — The town stands in a very healthy situation, within the limits of Windsor Forest. It consists of several streets, which diverge very irregularly from the market-place, but which are lined with other habitations, and many handsome residences. The church is a fine old and interesting structure. The town-hall, which stands in the centre of the market-place, is an ancient and interesting edifice. There is no record of the granting of a charter, so that it is now held that Wokingham is a borough by prescription, and is governed by a mayor, aldermen, and burgesses. It was not included in any of the schedules of the municipal act, and the county magistrates now, therefore, exercise the jurisdiction of its public affairs. The Baptists and Wesleyan Methodists have places of worship in the town. One of the schools here is endowed with £31 per annum, and another with £8 per annum. Near the church there are eight almshouses for sixteen poor persons, founded and endowed, in 1451, by Mr. John W. Westend Luckley-Green Hospital stands about a mile from the town, which was founded, in 1665, by Mr. Henry Lucas, and placed under the trusteeship of the Drapers' Company in London. It contains sixteen poor pensioners, each of whom receives £14 a year, and a master, the curate of the parish being the chaplain, and enjoying a house rent-free. The hospital, which was erected at a cost of about £2,300, is a very neat structure. The other charities are both numerous and valuable, producing about £280 a year, besides 133 acres of land appropriated to the poor for fuel. The Woking poor-law union comprises 16 parishes, with a population of about 12,000 persons, spread over an area of 67 square miles. — The living (All Saints) is a perpetual curacy in the diocese of Oxford: pres. net income, £175: patron, Bishop of Oxford: pres. incumbent, T. Morris, 1819: contains 8,450 acres: 636 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 3,342: do. in 1851, 3,843: ass^d. prop^r. £7,620: poor rates in 1848, £1,534. 8s. Tithes commuted in 1840. — Market day, Tuesday. Fairs: Oct. 10 and Nov. 2, for horses and cattle.

It is one of the finest ornaments of the county, and was erected of freestone, brought from Ancaster, by Sir Francis Willoughby, in exchange for coal brought up from mines which have been wrought from time immemorial. The noble proprietor of this princely dwelling, Digby Willoughby, Baron Willoughby, a baronet and a captain, R.N., who succeeded, as seventh baron, on the death of his cousin, is the representative of a family which traces its descent from Sir Christopher Willoughby, K.B., whose youngest son, Sir Thomas Willoughby, Knt., was chief-justice of the Court of Common Pleas in the reign of Henry VIII. One of the descendants of that learned personage, Sir Thomas Middleton, having served in six several parliaments during the reigns of William III. and Queen Anne, was elevated to the peerage by the title of Baron Middleton of Middleton, in Warwickshire, where the present peer has another seat.

Rail. through Birmingham to Wolverhampton station: from Derby, through Birmingham, &c., 54 miles.---London letters deliv^d 7 a.m. and 3½ p.m.: post closes 7.20 a.m. and 8.50 p.m.---This is one of those great manufacturing towns, which, standing for ages on a site in its obscurity, has, within the late great development of social progress, risen into extent, opulence, and importance. The town now consists of a vast variety of streets, most of which diverge in different directions from the market-place, which forms the centre. It is lighted with gas, well paved, and amply supplied with water from wells sunk to a great depth through the solid rock on which the town stands. Bishop Tanner, in speaking of the mother church, says---An ancient monastery of religious persons, built, or amply endowed, by a devout and charitable widow lady, called Wulfruna, in the year 996. This church was accounted one of the king's free chapels, was dedicated to St. Mary and St. Peter, and, with the collation of the prebendaries, was annexed by King Edward IV. to the deanery of Windsor. The church of St. Peter's is a stately and venerable cruciform structure, consisting of a lofty nave, two side aisles, and a chancel, with a very fine embattled and richly ornamented Gothic central tower, 120 feet in height. The aspect of the interior is severe and gloomy, with the exception of the chancel, which is rather incongruously fitted up in the modern style. St. John's, on the south-west side of the town, is an elegant Grecian structure of stone with a lofty spire. St. George's, on the Bilston Road, is a large and handsome structure of brick, cased with Tixal stone, and in the Doric order of architecture. There are also in the town three Independent, two Baptist, and two Methodist chapels; a meeting-house for the Society of Friends, a Roman Catholic chapel, and a Unitarian. The old town-hall is the place in which Mrs. Siddons, and her brother, Mr. John Kemble, first evinced their extraordinary histrionic talents; but there is now a neat theatre in the town, and the public subscription library and concert-rooms would be an ornament to any place. The situation of Wolverhampton, in the midst of coal mines, and in nearly the centre of England, has given to it great manufacturing advantages, especially as it has such excellent means of access and exit by road, railway, and canal. The charities are both numerous and important. The free grammar-school, founded by Sir Stephen Jenyns, Knt., has an income of not less than £1,168 per annum; and the Blue-coat school is endowed with upwards of £240 per annum. The other parochial benefactions produce nearly £1,000 a year. The town is under the jurisdiction of the county magistrates, who here hold the petty sessions for the north and south divisions. The borough was enfranchised by the Reform Act, and now returns two members to parliament; its boundaries comprise the townships of Wolverhampton, Willenhall, Wednesfield, Bilston, and the parish of Sedgely. The constable of the manor is the returning officer. Wolver-hampton poor-law union comprises a population of about 48,000 persons, spread over an area of 16 square miles. A workhouse, capable of accommodating 500 inmates, has been built here. Contains 14,110 acres: 9,151 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 70,370: ass^d prop^r £63,508. Tithes commuted in 1840. Market day, Wednesday. Fair, July 10. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 4 p.m.: post closes 10 p.m. and 8 a.m. Woodbridge consists principally of two streets, with a large square called Market-hill, but from these several minor ones, alleys and lanes, diverge. It stands on an eminence, round which there are several delightful walks, and the climate is considered to be remarkably salubrious. It is paved, lighted, and well supplied with water. The living is a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Suffolk, and diocese of Norwich: certified at £45; gross income, £445: patron, in 1841, the Rev. T. W. Salmon. The church is a spacious and handsome edifice of black flint and freestone. Here are two Independent churches, formed in 1651 and 1787; and places of worship for Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and the Society of Friends. It is estimated that about 1,500 of the population of this parish are dissenters. The schools are numerous, but no charities, important in other respects, appear to belong to the parish. Petty sessions are held every Wednesday, and quarter sessions for the hundred of St. Ethelred are held at the session-hall on the market-day, where the county business is usually transacted. Woodbridge is a place of considerable commercial importance, for the mouth of the river forms an excellent harbour or haven, and is navigable up to the town for vessels of 120 tons burthen. There is here a custom-house with all the necessary officers, the gross fiscal receipts being about £5,000 a year; and there are bonded warehouses for wine and spirits, wood, and corn. There are here two quays for the general purposes of commerce, but one of them is used for the accommodation of craft loaded with lime. The number of vessels belonging to the port are about forty, with an aggregate of upwards of 3,000 tons. The principal import consists of articles for domestic use, and the exports principally of cereal produce for the London and other markets. The Woodbridge poor-law union comprises 46 parishes, with a population of about 22,500 persons, spread over an area of 115 square miles.—Contains 1,650 acres: 961 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 4,954: do. in 1851, 5,696: ass^d. prop^r. £10,819: poor rates in 1848, £2,005. 13s.—Market day, Wednesday. The Baptists have a place of worship in the village. The manufacture of woollen cloths is carried on to a considerable extent in the town and neighbourhood. Eight out of the nine schools here are supported by endowments of from £10 to £12 per annum. Many Roman antiquities have been found in the neighbourhood.—The living (St. Mary), a rectory in the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol, is valued at £10: pres. net income, £310: patron, Lord Ducie: pres. incumbent, J. Williams, 1833: contains 1,180 acres: 187 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 908: ass^d. prop^r. £2,730: poor rates in 1848, £275. 8s.—Spring Park, the seat of Lord Ducie, has a noble mansion, surrounded by very varied and picturesque scenery. Henry George Francis Reynolds Moreton, Earl of Ducie and Baron of Ducie and Moreton, derives his descent from Sir Robert Ducie, Knt., sheriff of London in 1620, subsequently an alderman, who was created a baronet in 1629, and was lord mayor of the city two years afterwards. Sir Robert accumulated immense wealth, and though he lost more than £80,000 by Charles I., whose banker he was before the great rebellion broke out, he is said to have died worth more than £400,000. The son of that gentleman was elevated to the peerage by the title of Viscount Downe, and made a knight of the Bath at the coronation of Charles II. His honours, however, ceased at his death, and his estates descended to his only daughter, Elizabeth Ducie, who married Edward Moreton, Esq., whose son was created, in 1720, Lord Ducie, Baron of Moreton, in Staffordshire. Matthew, the second baron, was created Baron Ducie of Tortworth, in Gloucestershire, in 1763, with remainder to his nephews, Thomas and Francis Reynolds. The honour devolved upon Thomas, whose son Thomas was, in 1837 created Earl of Ducie and Baron of Moreton, in which honours he was succeeded in 1840 by the present peer.—The Priory, a fine old mansion near the church, is the seat of Sir William Wathen.

West. Rail. through Oxford to Woodstock: from Derby, through Rugby and Banbury to Woodstock, 86 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 9½ p.m.—This place, so noted as having been one of the most favourite of the royal abodes of our early sovereigns after the Norman era, derives its name from the ancient mixed Celtic and Saxon dialect of Vadestoc, meaning "a woody place." The neighbourhood is of that pleasing character in which our Saxon ancestors appear to have delighted, and it is said that it was here that Alfred the Great accomplished his translation of Boethius. Lambard makes many allusions to the place. The palace was the favourite residence of Henry I., and in the bower, the favourite of Henry II., the fair Rosamond formed her retreat. It was subsequently the scene of many incidents of royalty, and here, for a while, the poet Chaucer dwelt. During the reign of Queen Mary, Elizabeth, who succeeded her on the throne, was imprisoned here, and often after her accession made it her voluntary abode. The Duke of Portland derives his inferior title of Viscount from this place. Woodstock, though of small extent, consists of several well-built and respectable-looking streets, the structures being chiefly of stone, with an excellent proportion of handsome houses. It stands on an elevated piece of ground, bounded on the west by the river Glynn, which, after expanding into a sheet of lake-like water in Blenheim Park, is joined by the Evenlode, and shortly afterwards falls into the Isis. The church is placed upon the site of an ancient chantry, built by King John, and a portion of it was rebuilt towards the end of the last century. The town-hall is a handsome building, erected in 1766, after a design by Sir William Chambers, at the cost of the Duke of Marlborough. Queen Elizabeth granted a wool staple to the town, and there was a good business carried on in the manufacture of steel articles from old horse-shoe nails; but both the branches have come to nothing, and now the principal business of the town consists in the making of gloves, giving much employment here, and also in the surrounding villages. The Wesleyan Methodists and the Baptists have chapels here. The parochial charities produce about £146 per annum. Woodstock, which was a borough by prescription, was first incorporated in the time of Henry VI. It was not included in any of the schedules of the Municipal Reform Act, so remains under the old government provided by the charter of Charles II., of a mayor, high steward, recorder, four aldermen, sixteen common councilmen, and a town-clerk. Woodstock, some time previous to the reign of Elizabeth, returned two members to parliament. Now the ancient boundaries of the borough have been enlarged, so as to include the parishes of Bladon, Begbrook, Shipston-on-Cherwell, Hampton-Gay, Tackley, Wootton, Stonesfield, Coombe, and Handborough, and part of the parish of Kidlington. The Woodstock poor-law union comprises 31 parishes, with a population of about 13,000 persons, spread over an area of 68 square miles. The living is a curacy, annexed to the rectory of Bladon: contains 360 acres: 236 houses: popⁿ. in 1841, 1,412: do. in 1851, 1,624: ass^d. prop^r. £2,265: poor rates in 1848, £575. 15s. WOOLWICH, KENT, a parish and market town in the hun^d of Blackheath, lathe of Sutton-at-Hone, union of Greenwich, on the south bank of the Thames, but extending to the opposite shore in the county of Essex: 9 miles from London, 2 from Greenwich, 23 from Chatham. — Nor. Kent Rail. to Woolwich station: from Derby, through London, &c., 141 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 4 times each way daily. — This place is a great military and naval depot, and the population, which is of necessity variable, includes all the soldiers and marines at the time the census was taken, together with the convicts who are sentenced to inland transportation; the former including about 3,000 persons, and the latter more than 1,000. Although it is touching on our allotted space, we cannot refrain from quoting the account given by an able writer on the governmental—we should say the national—resources deposited at Woolwich, on the survey of which, the Emperor Alexander of Russia is reported to have observed, during the visit of the allied sovereigns to England, at the close of the long continental war, in 1814—“Good heavens! Why, you seem to have preparations for another contest of twenty years, instead of being exhausted at its conclusion.” The most interesting and important objects in Woolwich are the dock-yard, the arsenal, and other government works. The dock-yard here is supposed to be the most ancient royal dock-yard in the kingdom. It consists of a narrow strip of land on the banks of the river, about a furlong in breadth, and rather more than half a mile in length. The outer basin comprises an area of 120,000 square feet. The inner basin has an area of 160,000.

Recent extensive improvements in this great naval depot are such as must render it superior to any in the kingdom. The dry dock, at the east end of the yard, is without exception the finest and most commodious that has ever been built, and is constructed of the most durable materials, being first laid in the bottom with one foot of brickwork, and over it large granite stones, about 3 feet 6 inches in thickness, and each many tons in weight. The base of this dock is 230 feet in length, and of a proportionate breadth; but it will contain vessels of upwards of 300 feet in length on the upper deck. At the west end of the dock-yard, a dock of still greater dimensions than the old one was begun, in 1840, by Messrs. Grissell and Peto, and finished in July, 1843. The dimensions of the dock are 300 feet by 80 at the top of the water, and 245 feet at the bottom. In 1839, two ranges of building, each 440 feet in length by 26 in breadth, were built and fitted up with machinery for the manufacture of steam-engines and boilers. The royal arsenal, on the east side of the town, extends into the parish of Plumstead. It is the grand depot of artillery, &c., for the army and navy. It contains barracks, and foundries, factories, &c. for the manufacture of various warlike stores; and, including a part of the Plumstead marshes, used as an artillery practising ground, it extends over about 300 acres. A practice-range of nearly three miles in extent has also been formed towards Erith. All the government ordnance are first proved here. The quantity of cannon, cannon-balls, bomb-shells, &c., is immense. “After 22 years of profound and almost undisturbed peace,” says a recent writer, “during which time many thousands have been condemned and sold, there are still in the royal arsenal at Woolwich nearly 24,000 pieces of ordnance, and this is but a small portion of the mighty resources of the British nation. Of the above number nearly 3,000 are of gun-metal, and the remaining 21,000 of iron. There are also nearly 2,000,000 of cannon-balls and bomb-shells. The weight of the largest gun known to have been cast in the arsenal is 90 cwt., and the smallest from 2 to 3 cwt. The brass pieces are usually much lighter; the heaviest hitherto cast weighing only 36 cwt. There are four air-furnaces in the foundry, the largest of which will melt 325 cwt. of metal, a sufficient quantity to cast 14 guns, and the smallest 20 cwt.” On the east side of the artillery barracks are military hospitals, and on the west side is a piece of water on which experiments are occasionally made with boats. Between the dock-yard and the arsenal is a rope-walk, an extensive building about 400 yards in length, where, in time of war, several hundred workmen are engaged in making cables of all dimensions. On the south-west side of the barrack-field is the repository, containing an extensive collection of military models and trophies. An observatory for the officers of the royal artillery and engineers was lately in course of erection in the barrack-field between the repository and the mortar-battery, on the right wing of the barracks. An institution for the better education of engineer and military officers was founded here in 1719. It is under the direction of the Master-general and Board of Ordnance. The education is excellent; and the sons of officers are admitted upon a scale of payment corresponding to the father's rank, and varying from £80 to £20 per annum; while the sons of private gentlemen pay £125 per annum. The cadets receive an annual allowance of £45. 12s. 6d., and commissions according to their merit. It is understood that the establishment, which numbers from 150 to 170 pupils, now maintains itself." These details are long, but they are necessary. The town stands close to the banks of the Thames, from which the ground gradually rises to Shooter's Hill, a fine well-known elevation on the old high road from London to Dover. The principal street runs parallel to the river, being crossed by others of meaner appearance at right angles, the whole being about a mile in length. The living of Woolwich is a rectory, in the archd^y and diocese of Rochester; rated at £7. 12s. 6d.; gross income, £800: patron, the Bishop. The church is a neat brick edifice, overlooking the dockyard near the river. A new proprietary Episcopal church was recently erected near the arsenal gates. There are also the ordnance and barrack chapels, both of which are curacies in the patronage of the Board of Ordnance. Two Independent churches were formed here in 1796 and 1818 or 1819; two Baptist churches in 1744 and 1788; a Wesleyan Methodist in 1816; and there are also places of worship for Presbyterians and Welsh Methodists. A national Scottish church, in the Norman style, was opened in September, 1842, and a handsome Roman Catholic church in October, 1843. The charities are numerous and important, being chiefly for educational purposes. On Plumstead marshes, which adjoin the more elevated part of the town, the land-artillery are chiefly instructed.—Contains 840 acres: 2,672 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 25,785: ass^d prop^r £31,500: poor rates in 1848, £7,192. 15s.—Bankers: Branch of London and County Joint Stock Banking Co.—draw on Head Office, 21 Lombard Street.

WORCESTER, a city and county of itself, the seat of a see, and the capital of the county of Worcester, is locally situated in the division and union of Worcester, on the river Severn: 118 miles from London (coach road 111), 26 from Birmingham, 25 from Gloucester. — Gt. West. Rail. through Oxford to Worcester station: from Derby, through Birmingham to Worcester, 71 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m. and 4½ p.m.: post closes 7½ p.m. — Worcester is a place of as great antiquity as any in Britain, having been of considerable consequence as early as the time of the ancient Britons, when it was called Caer Guorangon. At all times, during the mere exercise of physical force for attack or defence, it was fenced in by an almost impenetrable forest on one side, and by the broad and rapid stream of the river Severn on the other. The Romans, on their arrival in this part of the country, perceived the advantages of its position, and made it one of their principal posts for the subjection of the surrounding district. After the union of the small Saxon kingdoms, the Bishop of Worcester obtained certain royal grants for the fortification of the cathedral and the close by which it was surrounded, and one portion of these fortifications, called Edgar's Tower, still remains. Worcester always held a distinguished position in English history; and on the breaking out of the civil war, was the first city that openly declared for the cause of Charles I. It afterwards, however, fell into the hands of the parliamentary forces, when an immense quantity of plunder was taken—a fine of £5,000 was paid, and a forced loan was levied on the inhabitants. On the removal of the republican garrison, the inhabitants again declared for the king, were again besieged, and only capitulated, on honourable terms, after a four months' siege. Again, in 1651, notwithstanding the opposition of the garrison, the gates were opened to Prince Charles and his Scottish forces, little recruited by the English during his march from Torwood. Cromwell fell upon the place with an army of 30,000 men, attacking it on all sides. The streets were strewn with dead. The prince was defeated, and the contest for the protectorate was ended when night closed in upon the scene. The city stands upon a gentle rise, being sheltered on the east by a finely-wooded hill; on all the quarters it lies open, spreading out on the broad plain of the river. Formerly it was defended by fortifications, which had six gates, the vestiges of which still remain. The principal streets are wide and handsome, and the whole of the town is well paved and lighted. The hop market is a fine quadrangle, surrounded by large warehouses. The general market-place is very convenient, and the market-house is a handsome building; but the principal architectural ornament of Worcester is its cathedral, an impressive specimen of the simple Gothic style of architecture. Its exterior is very plain, indeed almost entirely devoid of ornament, but, by the lightness of its general architecture, aided by the beautiful pinnacles which rise from the several terminations, by its height and the space which it occupies, the building has been invested with a peculiar grace. The original edifice was first erected by Ethelred, king of Mercia, about the year 680, when it was a convent for secular canons, but the greater part of the present buildings were erected between the years 1320 and 1386, by Bishop Wakefield. The form is the not uncommon one for cathedrals of the double cross, and it is finished in the most elaborate style. Its proportions are on a large scale, the building being 514 feet in length, 78 in breadth, and 68 in height. The tower rising forms the cross aisle to the altitude of 200 feet, is supported by pinnacles, and with battlements of fine light open work; much curious work and old sculpture may be seen in every part of it. The interior is almost singularly beautiful, not only from the complex and beautifully-blended views of the architectural portions, but also from the numerous monuments of eminent personages that it contains. The choir, with its clustered columns, and open-worked mouldings, is especially beautiful. The cloisters, which formerly held the monks, and which now are the residences of the dignitaries of the cathedral, are 125 feet by 120, the walks being 16 feet in width. The bishop's palace stands near the cathedral, in a most commanding situation, overlooking the banks of the Severn, which flows at the bottom of the garden. The city comprises the parishes of St. Alban, All Saints, St. Andrew, St. Clement, St. Martin, St. Nicholas, St. Peter, and St. Swithin, all in the archd^y and diocese of Worcester. The parishes of St. Clement, St. Martin, and St. Peter, extend beyond the limits of the city, and are partly within the lower division of the hund^{red} of Oswaldslow. The living of St. Alban is a rectory; rated at £5, returned at £60. 14s.; gross income, £74: patron, the Bishop. The church is a plain structure, requiring no particular notice. The living of All Saints is a rectory; rated at £13. 12s. 4½d., returned at £138; gross income, £150: patron, the Lord Chancellor. The living of St. Andrew is a rectory; rated at £10. 5s. 10d., returned at £120: gross income, £165: patrons, the Dean and Chapter. The church is an old building, but has been extensively altered and repaired within the present century. The tower and spire, which form one of the most striking objects in the city, rise to the height of 245 feet. The tower was cased with freestone in 1814, and the spire was the work of Nathaniel Wilkinson, a stone-mason of this city. The living of St. Clement is a rectory; rated at £5. 5s., returned at £100: gross income, £101: patron, the Dean and Chapter. The church, which was erected in 1822 at an expense of £6,000, is in the Saxon or Norman style of architecture. This building was erected instead of an ancient one which stood on the opposite side of the river, and was extremely inconvenient, from its being exposed to inundations from the stream. The living of St. Helen is a rectory; rated at £11, returned at £103. 11s.; gross income £137: patron, the Bishop. The living of St. Martin is a rectory; rated at £15. 3s. 4d.; gross income, £378: patrons, the Dean and Chapter. The living of St. Nicholas is a rectory; rated at £16. 10s. 7½d., returned at £127. 9s. 5d.; gross income, £260: patron, the Bishop. The church is an elegant structure, looking along the Foregate. The living of St. Peter is a vicarage, with the curacy of Wittington; rated at £12. 4s. 2d., returned at £131. 6s. 5d.; gross income, £237: patrons, the Dean and Chapter. The living of St. Swithin is a rectory; rated at £15. 15s.; gross income, £184: patrons, the Dean and Chapter. St. Paul, Bedwardine St. John, and Bedwardine St. Michael, are perpetual curacies: the two latter in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter. An Independent church was formed in 1668; a Baptist in 1712; a Wesleyan Methodist in 1800; and a Huntingdonian in 1782; and there are also a Friends' meeting-house, and a Roman Catholic chapel. The principal public buildings, beside the churches and chapels, are the guildhall, a handsome modern structure; the new county courts, the new jail, the infirmary, the theatre, and various structures for charitable purposes. The free grammar-school was founded by Queen Elizabeth, and is now attended by 25 boys. Butler, the witty author of 'Hudibras,' was educated here, and it is believed became a very learned man. Within the college precincts is the King's school, founded by Henry VIII. for forty poor scholars, all of whom are entitled to compete for two exhibitions at Balliol college, Oxford, founded by Dr. Bell, formerly bishop of Worcester. Ten of the scholars are appointed by the dean, and three by each of the prebendaries of the cathedral church. Moore's hospital was founded and endowed for the education and maintenance of ten Blue-coat boys. The other Worcester charities are very numerous, yielding an annual revenue of nearly £6,000 a year. Under the Municipal Act, the borough, which comprises much more than the limits of the city, is divided into six wards, governed by twelve aldermen and thirty-eight common councillors, under the usual corporate style. Their public income amounts to about £6,000 a year. Worcester has regularly returned two members to parliament since the 23d year of Edward I. The mayor is the returning officer. Worcester has also been made a polling-place, and the principal place of election, for the western division of the county. The principal manufactures of the city and its suburbs are those of gloves and porcelain, both of which are in large demand, both for home and foreign consumption, the china of Worcester being celebrated throughout the world. For these goods, its central situation, admirable means of inland navigation, and railways, give it excellent facilities. The Worcester poor-law union comprises 12 parishes in and around Worcester, with a population of about 27,000 persons, spread over an area of 15 square miles. Contains 220 acres: 3,568 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 25,793: ass^d prop^r £48,003. Market days, Wednesday and Saturday. Fairs: third Monday in January, February, March, and April; second Monday in May; first Tuesday in June and August; second Monday in July; September 19; first and second Monday in November; and second Friday in December. WORKINGTON, CUMBERLAND, a parish, market-town, and seaport, in the ward of Allerdale above Derwent, union of Cockermouth, on the river Derwent, near the sea: the parish, besides the town of Workington, contains the chapelry of Great Clifton, and the townships of Little Clifton, Stainburn, and Winscales: 334 miles from London (coach road 305), 6 from Maryport, 8 from Whitehaven. Nor. West. Rail. through Lancaster and Carlisle to Workington station: from Derby, through Crewe, &c., 234 miles. Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d 8.20 a.m. and 10.20 a.m.: post closes 2.20 p.m. and 6.10 p.m. The town stands on the south bank of the river, which is here crossed by a handsome bridge, receiving an excellent supply of water from the stream. The older portion of the place consists of several narrow and irregularly-built streets, but of late a few of more modern appearance have been erected. The church is a fine structure, in the later style of English architecture, with a square tower. St. John's chapel is of the Tuscan order of Grecian, having a cupola and portico. The Independents, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, Presbyterians, and Roman Catholics, all have places of worship here. The parochial endowments produce about £36 per annum. The petty sessions for the ward are held here every Wednesday by the county magistrates. There are good quays, and a breakwater has been erected for the defence of the harbour; the manufactures are chiefly those required for sea stores, such as sails and cordage. In the neighbourhood there are several coal mines, and the principal trade of Workington consists in the exportation of that article to the ports of Ireland and other places. The living (St. Michael), a rectory, with the perpetual curacy of St. John, in the archd^y of Richmond, and diocese of Chester, is valued at £23. 5s.: pres. net income, £966: patron, H. Curwen, Esq.: pres. incumbent, Henry Curwen: contains 7,730 acres: 1,663 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 6,694: do. in 1851, 7,698: ass^d prop^r £21,553: poor rates in 1848, £1,588. 19s. (For access and postal arrangements, see above.) Contains 1,190 acres: 42 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 188: ass^d. prop^r. £1,917: poor rates in 1848, £58. 11s.

WORKSOP, NOTTS, a parish and market town in the Hatfield division of the wapentake of Basselaw, union of Worksop, intersected by the Chesterfield Canal: it contains, besides the town of Worksop, the chapelries of Scofton and Shireoaks, and the hamlets of Gateford, Kilton, Osberton, Radforde, Ratcliff, Ryton, and Slowicks: 146 miles from London, 12 from Mansfield, 9 from East Retford. Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, and Gainsborough, to Worksop station, 173 miles: from Derby, through Darnal, &c., to Worksop, 47 miles. Money orders paid here: London letters deliv^d. 8½ a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. The situation of the town is very agreeable, being at the northern extremity of Sherwood Forest, not far from the source of the river Ryton, one of the tributaries to the Trent. It consists of one large street, crossed by others of nearly equal extent, and is well paved and lighted, all of them having many comfortable dwellings, and some of them being enlivened by handsome and gentlemanly residences. The principal trade is in malt, for which this part of the country has long been celebrated. The church was formerly the western part of an ancient priory, and is perhaps one of the most perfect specimens of the Anglo-Norman style of architecture in the kingdom. It has two very fine towers, one of which was the central tower of the old church, but which is now at the east end of the building. Near the approach to the churchyard, there is a beautiful gateway in the early style of English architecture, which was at one time the principal entrance to the priory. Close by are the picturesque remains of the chapel of St. Mary, and on the northern side of the church there are other and very interesting remains of the conventual buildings. The chapelries are under the patronage of G. S. Foljambe,

Esq., who has Scofton, and the Duke of Newcastle, who has Shireoaks in his gift. The Independents and Wesleyan Methodists have chapels in the village. One of the schools here is endowed with £14 per annum. The other charities produce about £29 a year. A workhouse has been built here at the expense of about £4,000, which is capable of receiving about 200 persons. The Worksop poor-law union comprises 26 parishes, with a population of about 16,500 persons, spread over an area of 122 square miles. The vicinity of Worksop is exceedingly picturesque, for it is nobly clothed with wood, and is surrounded by the parks and mansions of the highest nobility, being, indeed, known by the cognomen of the Dukery. Clumber Park is the seat of the Duke of Newcastle; Welbeck Park is the seat of the Duke of Portland; Worksop Manor is the seat of the Duke of Norfolk; all of which have been treated of under their respective heads of Clumber, Welbeck, and Arundel. There are the ruins here of a castle, once the abode of the Lovetot family, and of the ancient manor-house at Gateshead. The living (St. Mary and St. Cuthbert), a vicarage in the diocese of Lincoln, formerly in the diocese of York, is valued at £12. 4s. 2d.: pres. net income, £388: patron, Duke of Newcastle: pres. incumbent, J. For this notion, at least, there is considerable foundation, for several relics of that people have been dug up in the neighbourhood. The Saxons, at any rate, occupied the site, and the remains of the fortress, called Desborough Castle, which bear unmistakable evidences of that race, still remain, erected, it is supposed, to repress the incursions of the Danes. Prince Rupert made a successful attack on the parliamentary forces here during the civil war. The town, which is situated on the old high road from London to Oxford, consists principally of one street, with several smaller ones branching from it, mostly at right angles. It is well built, and contains many pleasing and highly respectable houses. The church is an old structure in the English style of decorated architecture, having a square embattled tower, surmounted by modern pinnacles. The interior is very handsome, consisting of a nave and aisles, with a chancel, separated from them by an oaken screen, richly carved. The town-hall, which was erected in 1757, is a large and commodious brick building, supported on 34 pillars. The Independents, Baptists, the several sections of the Methodist body, and the Society of Friends, all have chapels here. The educational institutions are numerous, and one of them is supported with an endowment of £70 per annum. A branch of the Royal Military College of Sandhurst existed here for some time previous to 1802. An hospital for lepers was founded here before 13th Henry III., and dedicated to St. Margaret and St. Giles. Here was also an hospital for a master, brethren, and sisters, dedicated to St. John the Baptist, founded before 20th Henry III. The revenues of this hospital having been increased in 1790 by a bequest of £1,000, and producing nearly £300 per annum, are now partly appropriated to the support of eight almshouses, and partly to the support of the school above noticed. Lane's almshouses consist of three houses inhabited by poor people, and 4 to 5 acres of land; income of the charity in 1833, £23 per annum. Other charities, about £63. 8s. per annum. Many of the inhabitants are engaged in the manufacture of paper, which here is carried on to a great extent, there being several mills on the streams of the Wick and the Wycombe, on the latter of which rivulets there are also several mills for grinding corn, for which this place is the central depot. The manufacture of lace, and the making of chairs, are also largely engaged in by the inhabitants. The town of Wycombe was incorporated at an early period, and several sovereigns, in different ages, enlarged and confirmed its privileges. Under the general Municipal Act, the borough is made, in its extent, coincident with the town and its suburbs, and is governed by four aldermen and twelve councillors under the usual corporate style. Wycombe returns two members to parliament. The Wycombe poor-law union comprises 33 parishes, with a population of about 33,000 persons, spread over an area of 147 square miles. The living (All Saints), a vicarage in the diocese of Oxford, is valued at £23. 7s. 1d.: pres. net income, £140: patron, Marquis of Lansdowne: pres. incumbent, H. It is pleasing in appearance, and is well supplied with water from springs. The inhabitants, who are exempt from serving on juries at sessions and assizes, are chiefly employed in the manufacture of crapes and bombazines, the place being one of the most important of those connected with the trade of Norwich. The town, as well as the priory, owed its origin to a convent of Black monks, whose institution was founded in the time of Henry I. by William de Albini, by whom it was richly endowed. Some time about the year 1448, the priory was converted into an abbey, which at the general dissolution of the monasteries was valued, according to Sir William Dugdale, at £211. 16s. 6d. per annum. The free grammar-school has an endowment of £182 per annum, but the income appears to have been greatly distorted. The other charities produce about £144 per annum, of which £46, arising from Gray's charity, are applied to religious objects. Other portions of the parochial benefactions are used for the casual relief of the resident poor. The church, which is a remnant of the ancient abbey, is built in various styles of English architecture. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. —The living (St. Mary the Virgin), a vicarage in the arch^d. of Norfolk, and diocese of Norwich, is valued at £10. 14s. 4½d.: pres. net income, £515: patron, Bishop of Ely: pres. incumbent, Rev. Hon. the Earl of Abingdon, Baron Norreys of Rycote, high steward of Abingdon, and lord-lieutenant of the county of Berks. The noble earl derives his descent, through a long series of distinguished ancestors, from the ancient family of Norreys, which flourished long before the time of Henry III., whence his lordship traces his pedigree. One of them, Sir Henry Norris, Knt., having very ably fulfilled the office of ambassador to France, was summoned to parliament by writ as Baron Norreys, in the time of Queen Elizabeth. Francis, his son, the second baron, was created Viscount Thame, and Earl of Berkshire. At his death the earldom expired, and the barony descended to his grandson, the Hon. James Bertie, who was summoned to parliament as Baron Norreys, and was created Earl of Abingdon in 1682. From him the present peer is a direct descendant.

Rail. through Peterborough, Lincoln, and York, to Darlington, thence 9 miles: from Derby, through York, &c., 142 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 9 a.m.: post closes 3.40 p.m. and 6½ p.m. — Yarm has frequently suffered from inundation, but its prosperity has declined chiefly from its being close to the port of Stockton-on-Tees. Its trade consists principally in salmon caught in the river, which are sent to the London markets. One of the schools here has an endowment of £21 per annum; the other charities produce about £15. 15s. per annum. The Independents, Wesleyan and Primitive Methodists, and Society of Friends, have chapels in the town. — The living (St. Mary Magdalene), a perpetual curacy in the archd^y of Cleveland, and diocese of York, is valued at £38. 9s. 6d.: pres. net income, £210: patron, Archbishop of York: pres. incumbent, J. Winpenny, 1840: contains 1,180 acres: 388 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 1,511: do. in 1851, 1,738: ass^d prop^r £4,207: poor rates in 1848, £462. 18s. — Market day, Thursday. Fairs: Thursday before April 5, Holy Thursday, August 2, October 18, 19, and 20, for horses and cattle.

YARMOUTH, HANTS, a parish, and a disfranchised borough, and market town, in the liberty of Medina, Isle of Wight incorporation and division of the county, at the mouth of the river Yar: 98 miles from London (coach road 94), 5 from Lynton, 10 from Newport. — Sou. West. Rail. to Southampton, thence 18 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Southampton, &c., 185 miles. — Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d 7 a.m.: post closes 6 p.m.

—The town, which is well built, lies upon the declivity of a height, and consists of several neat streets. At the western extremity there is a fort, erected by Henry VIII., on the site of a monastery. The trade consists chiefly in the exportation of sand for glass-works, and in the importation of seaborne coals, and of timber from the New Forest. There is a ferry here to Lymington, to which there is an easy passage. The charities produce about £30 per annum. The Baptists, Wesleyan Methodists, and Roman Catholics, all have chapels here. The first charter of incorporation possessed by Yarmouth was granted by Baldwin de Kedvers, Earl of Devon. This was confirmed by Edward I. and James I., under the latter of which monarchs it was governed by a mayor and twelve capital burgeses. Yarmouth sent two members to parliament under a grant of Edward I., but the right was scarcely exercised till the 27th year of Queen Elizabeth. It was, however, disfranchised by the Reform Act.—The living (St. James), a rectory in the archd^y and diocese of Winchester, is valued at £50: pres. net income, £100: patron, Lord Chancellor: pres. incumbent, R. Little, 1841: contains 50 acres: 104 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 567: ass^d. prop^y. £806: poor rates in 1848, £99. 16s.—Market day, Friday. Fair, July 26.

YARMOUTH, NORFOLK, a borough, parish, seaport, and market town, in the eastern division of the hund^d. of Flegg, union of Yarmouth: 134 miles from London (coach road 124), 10 from Lowestoft, 24 from Norwich.—East. Co^t. Rail. through Norwich to Yarmouth station: from Derby, through Syston, Peterborough, Norwich, &c., 186 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7 a.m.: post closes 8½ p.m.—The chief and most ancient portion of the town, which is in some places only irregularly built, stands on a narrow slip of land, bounded by the sea on the east, and the river Yare on the west, and occupies a site about a mile in length, by half a mile in width. It consists of four principal streets, with numerous others branching from them. A wall, which was begun in the reign of Edward I., formerly surrounded the town. It had ten gates and sixteen towers, and was so strongly built of pebbles and cement, that its demolition, in the course of the improvement of the town, was an operation of no small difficulty. A deep moat encircled the fortifications, and all pains seem to have been taken to render the place one of great warlike security, for, in addition to these defences, there was a strong castle, which was demolished in the 17th century, in consequence of the civil war between Charles I. and the parliament. The South Town, or Little Yarmouth as it is called, forms a suburb to its greater neighbour, and consists chiefly of pleasing villas and other residences, extending more than a mile and a half in length along the road to Gorleston. The space between the road on which they stand, and the river opposite to Great Yarmouth, over which there is a bridge, is used for building-yards, docks, and other places of business necessary to the marine interests of the port. Gorleston lies to the south of the town, near to the entrance of the harbour. Near to it there are a number of marine villas with lodging-houses of various grades, occupied during the season by visitors from inland districts, of which great numbers frequent Yarmouth in the summer season for sea-bathing. The living of the parish is a perpetual curacy, in the archd^y and diocese of Norwich: gross income, £450: patrons, the Dean and Chapter of Norwich. The church is an ancient cruciform structure. It being in design to divide Yarmouth into two parishes, a large and handsome new church was erected a few years since. St. George's is a perpetual curacy, of the annual value of £200, and in the patronage of the Rev. M. Waters. St. Peter's is also a perpetual curacy, of the annual value of £160, and in the patronage of the Dean and Chapter of Norwich. A Presbyterian church was formed in 1742; a Wesleyan Methodist in 1793; a Primitive in 1828; and there are also a Friends' meeting-house, and places of worship for the Baptists, Independents, Unitarians, and Roman Catholics. The hospital or grammar-school is endowed with about £860 a year, for the support and education of thirty boys and twenty girls, who are afterwards apprenticed; another school is endowed for ten boys and six girls; and there are, moreover, two Lancastrian schools, one for boys, the other for girls. There is a valuable public library in the town, and a neat theatre, circus, Vauxhall and Apollo gardens, promenades, and other places of recreation and amusement; and there are occasional assemblies, races, regattas, and "water frolics." A remedial hospital, with a dispensary department, was recently built. The fisherman's hospital, erected in 1702, is a low quadrangular building, with forty rooms for the accommodation of twenty decayed fishermen and their wives: income, £56. 10s., besides £160 paid till 1831 out of beer duties then repealed. Warne's charity—income, £375—is distributed in life annuities to widows, in allowances to orphans and the sick, &c. There are about twenty-five benefactions of a minor description, some of them forming part of the hospital and school endowments. There are also several houses in different parts of the town, which the poor are allowed to occupy rent-free. The guildhall is an ancient structure of stone and flint. There are barracks here fitted for the accommodation of 1,000 men; a fort at the mouth of the Yare was built in 1653, and during the late war three batteries were constructed along the beach, with an appropriate magazine for military stores. On the sands, or dunes, as they are locally termed, south-east of the town, a fine column, 144 feet in height, has been erected to the memory of the heroic Nelson. The harbour of Great Yarmouth was constructed with much difficulty, and at great expense, by the erection of piers and a jetty, which are kept in repair by a very heavy outlay. The out-trade of this place is both extensive and important, this being, with the exception of London and Hull, the principal port for trading with the north of Europe. The chief domestic business of Yarmouth lies in its herring and mackerel fishery, in which a large number of boats, and some thousand hands, are employed, both in the catch and in the curing of the fish. There is a spacious custom-house on the quay, and bonding warehouses for all articles except tobacco, unless brought coastwise or for ships' use. The duties received amount to between £70,000 and £80,000. Ship-building and the provision of ships' stores are carried on to a considerable extent. Yarmouth has been largely enfranchised, having received as many as twenty-four charters; that which generally governed the town being one granted by Queen Anne, who appointed a mayor, steward, eighteen aldermen, and a number of other officers. Under the Municipal Act it is governed by twelve aldermen and thirty-six common councillors, and a recorder and a commission of the peace have been granted. The borough has sent two members to parliament ever since the reign of Edward I. The borough has a poor-law union of its own. — Contains 1,270 acres: 4,570 houses: popⁿ in 1841, 24,086: ass^d. prop^r. £24,385. — Market day, Saturday. Rail. through Southampton to Dorchester, thence 18 miles: from Derby, through Rugby, Oxford, and Reading, to Dorchester, &c., 248 miles. Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 9 a.m.: post closes 5½ p.m. The town is well built, well supplied with water, and displays many attractive features. It derives its name from the river Yeo, or Ivel, the Velox of the Romans, which, rising from seven springs near the town of Sherborne, flows until it becomes the boundary between the counties of Somerset and Dorset, and passes this place at a little distance eastward. The church is a fine old cruciform structure, in the ancient style of English architecture, and stands in about the centre of the town: there is a tower at the west end, surmounted by a balustrade, and, according to Leland, once included the chantries of St. John the Baptist, the Holy Cross, the Holy Trinity, and the Virgin Mary. Woollen goods were at one time made to a considerable extent at Yeovil, but gloves are now the principal articles of manufacture. The Independents, Wesleyan Methodists, Unitarians, and Society of Friends, all have chapels here. The government is vested by prescription in a portreeve and burgesses. One of the schools here is endowed with £65 per annum. Woburn's almshouses, consisting of tenements for twelve poor persons, are endowed with £277. 8s. 4d. per annum. The portreeve's almshouses have an income of £10. 14s. 1d. per annum. The other charities produce about £34 a year. A workhouse has been built here at an expense of £5,200, which will accommodate 300 persons. The Yeovil poor-law union comprises 35 parishes, with a population of about 26,000 persons, spread over an area of 79 square miles. YORK, YORKSHIRE, a city and ainsty or county in itself: the capital of Yorkshire is situated near the centre of the shire, at the point where the three ridings meet, at the confluence of the rivers Ouse and Foss: 210 miles from London (coach road 199), 24 from Leeds, 113 from Carlisle.—Gt. Nor. Rail. through Peterborough and Lincoln to York station: from Derby, through Sheffield to York, 78 miles.—Money orders issued here: London letters deliv^d. 7½ a.m. and 8 p.m.: post closes 6½ p.m. and 10 p.m.—The ainsty was, in 1837, constituted into a wapentake, and its inhabitants vote for members in the north riding of the county; but it lies wholly to the west of the city, comprising ten parishes, twenty-six townships, and three chapeltries, extending in one direction to the length of ten miles. York is situated in the midst of one of the most extensive and fertile valleys in England, and is surrounded by walls, which were renovated as late as the year 1831, the fortifications being still retained of their original height. The older—which is the case in most of our cathedral places—the chief part of the city, stands on the gentle acclivity which rises from the eastern bank of the river Ouse, over which stream there is a handsome three-arched bridge, which was built at a cost of £80,000, and was opened in the year 1820. The Foss, another stream, which is retained by lock-gates, at an elevation of seven feet higher than the Ouse, is crossed by four other bridges, one of them being a fine edifice of stone. The streets are fine, well built, and wear that quiet aristocratic air which is always perceptible where men of education are largely assembled, as must be the case wherever a dean and chapter exist. The principal buildings are,—the castle, which stands on a peninsula formed by the waters of the Ouse and the Foss; it is an immense structure, the walls being upwards of 1,100 yards in circumference, the county hall and new county prison buildings occupying, in a radiated form, an area of four acres, at the entire cost of £203,000. Extensive cavalry barracks have been erected to the south of the city, at an expense of upwards of £30,000. The guildhall, which was erected about the year 1446, comprises a very noble Gothic hall, 96 feet in length. The concert hall, one of the finest in the kingdom, was built in 1825, and is a great ornament to the city; as is also the lord mayor's residence, which stands in Blake Street, and is a very stately edifice. Within the city there are twenty-three churches, thirteen chapels, a theatre, and several public halls. But the crowning glory of York is its cathedral, the most stately Gothic edifice in the kingdom, which stands on the north side of the city, and, except on its northern side, is closely hemmed in by other buildings. It was probably completed about the year 1410 or 1412, on the site of a still more ancient edifice. It is cruciform; and, in the order of its antiquity, consists of a south transept, built in 1227; north transept, built in 1260; nave finished in 1330; central tower begun in 1370, and choir extending from the west end, to the east. Viewed in this order, it is perhaps the most perfect example extant of the history and progress of the Gothic style, during the lapse of nearly two centuries, which its construction occupied. The whole length of the edifice, from east to west, is 524½ feet; breadth of east end, 105; of west, 109; length of cross aisles from north to south, 222; height of grand lantern tower, 235; height of two western towers, 196; height of nave or body of church, 99; height of eastern window, 75; breadth, 32. The west front is adorned with two beautiful towers, between which, over the entrance, is a window of fine painted glass. The lantern steeple is ornamented with great taste, and has eight windows, 45 feet in height. The choir is divided from the rest of the church by a curious stone screen, over which is the noble and newly-built organ; and the front is adorned with statues of the kings of England, from William the Conqueror to Henry VI. There are 32 stalls for the prebendaries, all of marble; behind which, on each side of the choir, are ranges of carved woodwork adorned with pinnacles. The ascent to the altar is by a flight of 16 steps, and the whole of the body of the church is paved in mosaic. Many of the ancient nobility, as well as archbishops, lie buried here, and some of the monuments are magnificent. The chapter-house is a fine specimen of Gothic architecture. It is an octagon, 63 feet in diameter, and 67 feet high; the roof, supported without pillars, is a cone of curious carved work covered with lead. Around the interior of the octagon are 44 beautiful marble stalls, and in each of the eight sides is a window, except in one, through which is the entrance from the transept. On 2d February, 1829, Jonathan Martin, a lunatic, set fire to the choir of this venerable church, the stalls of which, with the organ, and part of the roof, were completely destroyed. A restoration was effected in 1833, under the direction of Mr. Smirke, at an expence of £65,000, which was defrayed by voluntary subscription. In May, 1840, the south-western tower was accidentally fired, and the roof of the nave became involved in the disaster. The expence of the restoration thus again rendered necessary, was estimated at about £20,000, and the repairs have now been completed and defrayed by voluntary subscription. In the southern tower a huge bell—the largest in England—has been put up. It weighs nearly 13 tons, and with the stock 16 tons; and is 9 feet 6 inches in height. The clapper, which is of wrought-iron, weighs 4 cwt. It is to be rung with two wheels, each 14 feet in diameter, and will, it is said, require twelve men to ring it. It is heavier by 7 tons than "Tom of Lincoln," and by 5 tons than "Old Tom of Oxford." It was cast by Messrs. Mears of London, and the cost of it was about £2,000. The city of York is formed of 32 parishes and townships, respectively supporting their own poor, and one liberty. The churches are much too numerous for minute description here. They are chiefly in the later style of English architecture, with an occasional intermixture of the Norman and early English. That of St. Michael-le-Belfry is the largest and most elegant. A Presbyterian church—now Unitarian—was formed here in 1692; and four Wesleyan Methodist, in 1805, 1816, 1826, and 1840. Salem Independent chapel was opened in 1839; Lendal chapel in 1816. The Methodist Centenary chapel is a handsome building, with seats for 2,000 persons. There are also places of worship for other Methodists, and for Baptists, Sandemanians, Society of Friends, and Roman Catholics. To enumerate the several endowments is far beyond our limits, and it may therefore suffice to say, that they consist of every variety, and that their aggregate income is reckoned at upwards of £4,500 a year. To give a history of York would be almost to write a history of England; but we may observe, that it was in the time of the Romans considered to be a place of great importance, and during the several ages of our national progress, the possession of it has always been considered of high import to the public weal. In the time of the Romans it was an eminent station, and Severus, who built the Pictish wall, died here. Under the heptarchy, York became the capital of Northumbria, and during the wars of the Roses, the great civil contest, and the revolution which seated William III. on the throne, was a key to many operations. Formerly it was a port, but the tide does not now rise so far, and the business of the city now chiefly depends upon its domestic transactions. The city, under the Municipal Act, is divided into six wards, governed by 12 aldermen and 36 common councillors; their public income amounts to about £6,000 a year. The common lands extend over several hundred acres, and there are public walks which extend for more than a mile in length along the banks of the river Ouse, and the old ramparts of the city have also been converted into a fine promenade.—Contains 2,720 acres, city; 4,586, ainsty: 52,440 houses, city; 7,710, ainsty: popⁿ in 1841, 38,321: ass^d prop^r £44,368, city; £69,892, ainsty: poor rates in 1848, £7,725. 2s., city; £1,309. 14s., ainsty.—Market day, Saturday.
